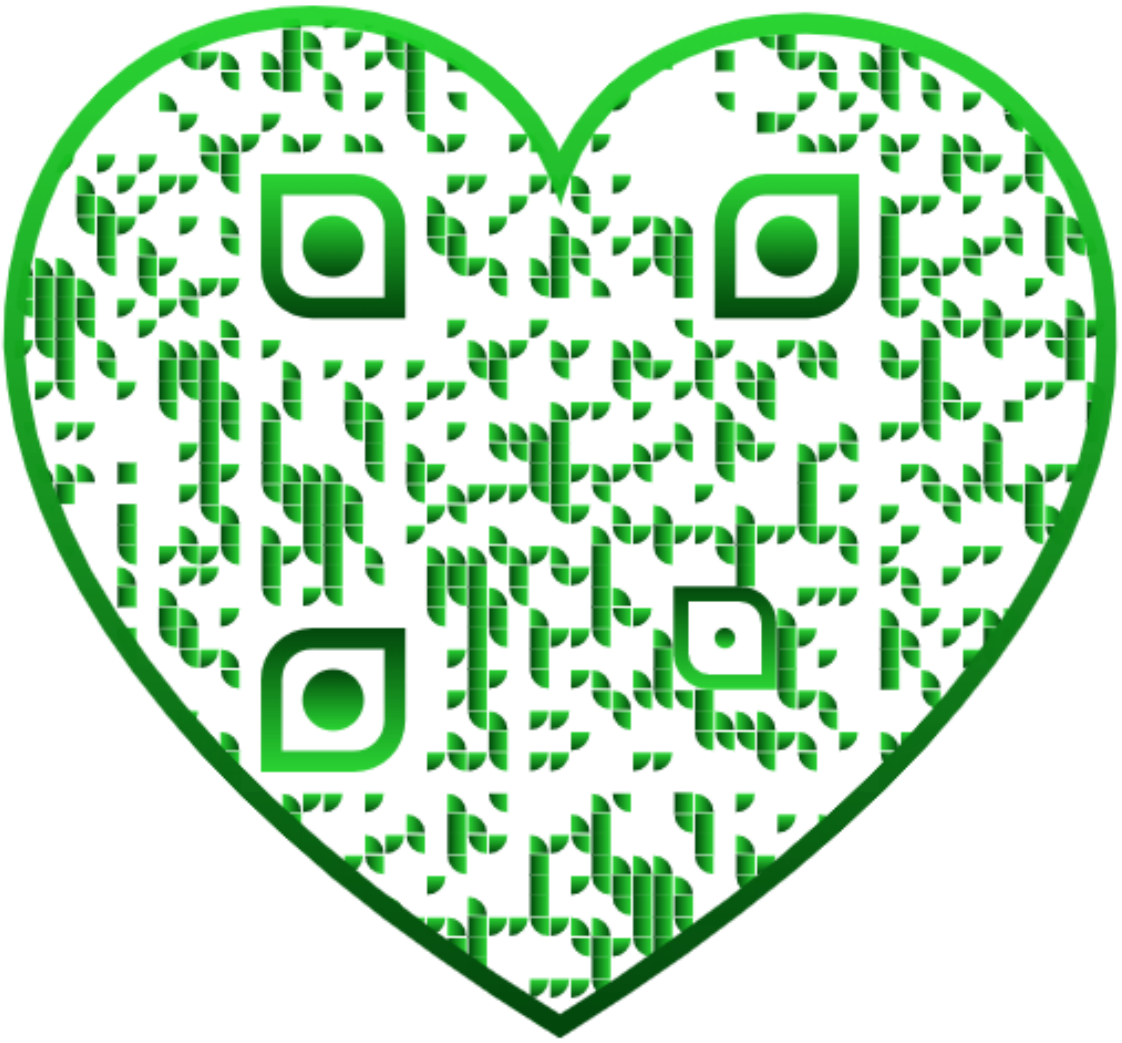
THE SECRET SPACE AGE

Secret Space Programs, Breakaway Civilizations, Nazi UFOs, SDI and Alternative Three

by Olav Phillips

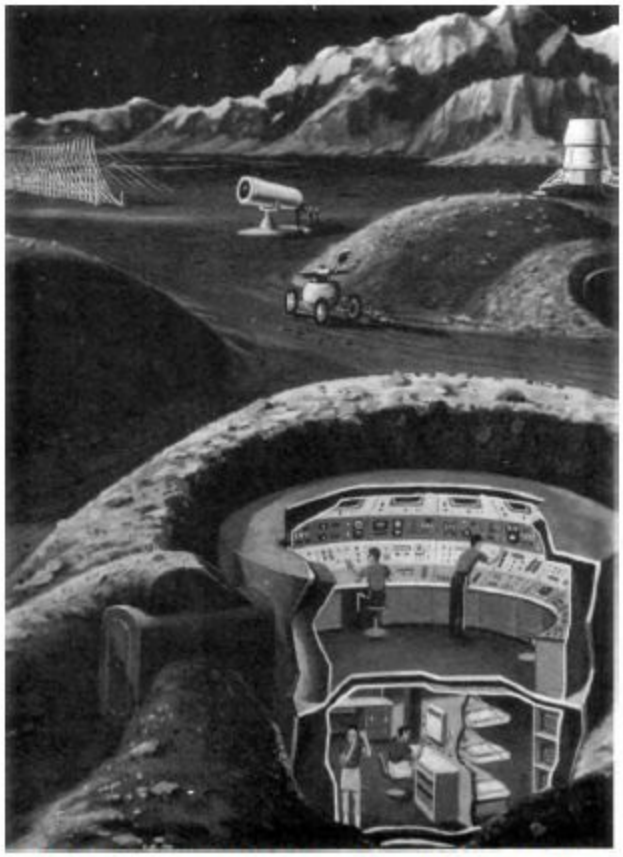


THE SECRET SPACE AGE

Secret Space Programs, Breakaway Civilizations, Nazi UFOs, SDI and Alternative Three

Olaf Phillips

Adventures Unlimited Press



A 1961 artist's conception of a manned base on the Moon (NASA)

TABLE OF CONTENTS

1. In the Beginning There was Only Darkness

2. Coming of Age in the Secret Space Race

3. Alternative Three—The Most Dangerous Show Ever Produced

4. Alternative 1—Things Go Boom

5. Alternative 1.5—Geoengineering, Chemtrails and Global Dimming

6. Alternative 2—D.U.M.B Projects and the End of the World

7. Alternative 2.5—Agenda 21, The Population Bomb and the Georgia Guidestones

8. Alternative 3—This Ain't Kansas Anymore, This is the Main Event

9. The Nazi Flying Saucers

10. Close Encounters of the Totally Germanic Kind

11. UFO Iconography—Uh It's Not Alien, That's for Sure…

12. Lasers, UFOs, and SDI—Evidence of the War in Space, Space Warden and the Hidden Military Machine in Orbit

13. Weapons in Orbit—Arming the High Frontier

14. Moon Bases, Mars Bases and the Great Beyond

15. Staffing the Solar War Machine—Mysterious Disappearances, National Parks, and the Breakaway Civilization

16. Dead Scientists and the Disappearances of the Great

17. The End is Nigh

Dedication

This book is dedicated to my wife, who has put up with my quest for more then two decades, and I'm only just getting started. I also want to dedicate this to my children in the hopes that one day they will learn of the amazing discoveries humanity has really made, not just what's in the history books. Finally, my parents, who dared me to wonder, challenged me to think and introduced me to the library.

"The probability of success is difficult to estimate; but if we never search the chance of success is zero." Giuseppe Cocconi and Philip Morrison - 'Searching for Interstellar Communications'

1.

IN THE BEGINNING THERE WAS ONLY DARKNESS

It is said that space is the last true frontier. It is an environment which humanity has not yet conquered. Its size is vast and its borders incalculable, at least to the common person. It is that mystery and immensity that drives people all over the world gather by the flame to just sit in awe of its depth and immensity.

For 100 years humanity has tried to conquer space. Starting in 1957 with Sputnik, its faint single piecing the inky blackness and telling us there is something now up there.

Two months later Sputnik 2 was launched, proving life could survive in space. Laika, the heroic dog, proved that if properly protected life was capable in space. Granted Laika died several hours later, but the beachhead was established. Life could be sustained and if something could live for several hours than life could be sustained for several days, weeks, months or even years.

At that point life in space became an engineering problem and engineering problems can be solved.

It took another four years before humanity dared send a human into space.

In April of 1961, Yuri Gagarin achieved immortality as the first human into space. Riding the flames of his rocket into low earth orbit, Gagarin stayed aloft for 108 minutes and did one full orbit before plummeting back to the safety of the Earth.

For the rest of 1962, a race began to emerge as the Soviet Union fought for space supremacy by launching several more missions in to the high frontier. Meanwhile, the United States was able to launch Alan Shepard in Freedom 7 and later John Glenn in Mercury.

From this point the race intensified further as the United States accelerated its public space program, culminating in the Apollo program and later, a landing on the moon in 1969.

It was during that landing that Neal Armstrong uttered those immortal words, "One small step for man, one giant leap for mankind." The world rejoiced as the moon, our closest celestial neighbor, had been conquered. Or had it?

Since that time a different story has begun to emerge. The moon landing is now rocked by controversy which has lead to legions of people who not only believe the moon landing was a hoax but that during the last 70 years, a systematic program of disinformation has occurred. This has, in turn, lead to a line of research which has attempted to prove on one hand that we never went, but on the other hand maybe we were already there.

One can see this cover-up emerge even while the Apollo program was under way as the Soviets launched the Salyut program.

It is not widely known, but three of the Salyut stations were in fact part of the "Almaz" program. The Almaz stations were crewed by Soviet military personal and were armed by a large cannon.

The presence of the Alamaz forced the United States Air Force to respond with the "MOL" or Manned Observation Laboratory program, which sought to place our own battle stations into orbit.

So began, quietly, the weaponization of space…

It was that act of the weaponization of space that has left the last great high frontier to carry forth the Cold War, at a large scale.

Military planners sought to establish space fleet and moon bases, as if out of a science fiction novel. Battle stations and robotic hunter killer satellites circling quietly over our heads as we slept, confident in our supremacy while the Soviets were confident in theirs. All the while the world slept.

This is a story about secrets and hidden things. It is about the very real possibility that there are indeed devices, people and projects underway which have indeed colonized space. Finally, this is about the story which had been given to the public I actually just good science fiction, because all is not as it would seem.

My intention is not to provide concrete evidence that a secret space program exists. To be honest with compartmentalization and special access programs, that is a fool's errand. My intent is rather to discuss some of the programs, people and operations that did happen but were suppressed.

I intend to construct a framework, demonstrating that 4by 1969 the United States government as well as the Soviet Union was far beyond the moon landing missions. I also intend to demonstrate and explore this notion that there is indeed a secret space age in to which the public has never been given insight.

The world is a strange place and we are only beginning our descent

2.

COMING OF AGE IN THE SECRET SPACE RACE

UFOs are one of those things…those things people always latch onto. They are prolific in science fiction and once people learn of my interest, always a topic of conversation at parties. Statements like, “I saw a light in the sky,” or “This funky triangle flew over my head” abound. My life is bereft with these statements, but there never seem to be a conclusion or end game. This has made UFOs a highly debated topic.

Like many in Ufology, I started out as a firm believer in the alien hypothesis. This means that I believed that all those triangles and funky lights in the sky were alien in origin. But I was riddled with doubt. What if they weren’t aliens? It’s a question which has vexed me for the last decade because in time I started to believe a percentage might not be. Now in some circles, that is a heretical statement, but a statement I believe to be true never the less.

Research into the Secret Space Age started for me many years ago. I had been gifted a 10th generation VHS copy of the long sought-after “Science Report: Alternative Three.” Back then it was just a kitschy 1970s era conspiracy mockumenatry shown on East Anglia TV.

As time went on and I started to really watch it something dawned on me. Maybe Alternative Three was fundamentally true? It sounded structurally plausible. This lead to an even more disturbing thought: maybe some UFOs were not alien in origin but instead man made. But for what purpose? That was the question which launched the descent into where I find myself now.

Space is a funny thing, they call it the high frontier and like many I had dreams of space shuttles going to the moon. I eagerly anticipated taking my seat on a Pan-Am shuttle to a space station, then scooting across the surface much as Haywood Floyd did in Kubrick's amazing, and conspiratorially controversial, 2001: A Space Odyssey. A say conspiratorially because that film, like so many other, has played a part in this new secret space age.

So what is knocking around in the high frontier, and what does it have to do with movies or the enigmatic Alternative Three?

Sometime in the late 1990's rumors started to emerge of a secret program, utilizing high technology to conquer space and possibly other planets. According to myth, there was even a secret space fleet, replete with high tech vehicles, regularly leaving the planet for parts unknown.

It was also the time of the SERPO question, the idea that military personnel were being assigned to an exchange program with aliens on another planet called SERPO. While fascination the supposed SERPO program started to died away rumors emerged that it might have been a hoax. The hoax labeled killed investigation into SERPO, but what if SERPO might actually have been real?

Then it happened. In 2002 a lowly systems administrator from Scotland, utilizing only a 56k modem cracked the question wide open. His name was Gary McKinnon and what he found was so amazing that it caused the full weight of the United States government to come after him.

McKinnon was accused, and did, hack into a series military and NASA computers but it wasn't the hacking that makes his story interesting. It's what he found. McKinnon claims to have found references to a program called Solar Warden, which was nothing less then a secret space fleet darting around the space high above us. McKinnon also claimed to have found manifests and crew transfer notices for a series of ships and installations which don't exist here on Earth.

Solar Warden had entered our psyche and popular culture. Researchers rushed out to discover more about Solar Warden and discovered that a program under SDI had existed called Solar Warden. In fact an enterprising journalist from the Huffington Post filed a freedom of information act request and received a very interesting response.

Darren Perks in a blog posting from 12/7/12 stated:

> About an hour ago I spoke to a NASA rep who confirmed this was their program and that it was terminated by the President. He also informed me that it was not a joint program with the DoD. The NASA rep informed me that you should be directed to the Johnson Space Center FOIA Manager.
>
> I have ran your request through one of our space-related directorates and I'm waiting on one other division with the Command to respond back to me. I will contact you once I have a response from the other division. Did NASA refer you to us?

Interesting response, and proof of an actual program.

Around the same time near Thousand Oakes California a pilot reported seeing a strange object in the sky overhead. His report was that an odd craft was flying at 5000ft altitude and at around 200mph. The aircraft was heading S/SE, which would have placed it on a approach flight path to Edwards Air Force Base which is the home to many an odd aircraft. What's even more interesting is that the aircraft sighting was a very large and very slow aircraft.

A month later the same object was seen over the San Francisco Bay Area, again flying S/SE, but only this time at around 70,000ft altitude and flying at an 45 degree angle down. It was a very serendipitous set of sightings, which started to form a construct for what McKinnon had claimed to have seen. The best part is that it only took 10 years for the pieces to come together.

One of the things McKinnon had claimed to have seen on his journey to the classified unknown was the specification for a ship which could carry more then 300 people, a troop transport if you will, which was possibly the troop transport sized object witnessed by these individuals. The presence of that "troop transport" had another link to Alternative Three and its notion of "Batch Consignments," but we'll get to that in a minute.

Solar Warden, secret space fleets, bases on the Moon/ Mars sounds a little nutty right? Maybe not s crazy as you think and maybe more real then you know.

For many years a strange object has been seen in low Earth orbit. Originally it was claimed, and still is for that matter, that this object was the elusive "Black Knight." An alien space probe which has been producing Long Delay Echoes for the last 70 years. The Black Knight was also implicated in the research of Duncan Lunan, who claimed in the 1970's that he had cracked the code of the object which he claimed was a brace well probe. Based on the decrypted message Lunan believed the probe had come from Epsilion Booties and was here to do research on us earthlings.

The problem is that this mysterious vessel, photographed numerous times, is not a brace well style probe, and the Black Knight is known to haunt L2 (Lagrange Point 2) out past low earth orbit towards the moon, which gives it a wonderful location for monitoring the earth and its friendly inhabitants

No the vehicle photographed is most likely not the Black Knight, but given its location could very well be part of Solar Warden.

Solar Warden's use of high technology extends the conversation and takes yet another technological detour. Because it could be argued the genesis of Solar Warden's high technology originated in a series of ultra secret Nazi programs operated out of a facility known as "Der Riese" ("The Giant") located at the Skoda Munitions facility in occupied Czechoslovakia. If the research of pioneers such as Joseph Farrell and Henry Stevens are to be believed, one of the most significant technological leaps ever made was made at Der Riese, by the Germans, in the 1940's.

It was at Der Riese under the leadership of a SS general named Hans Kammler, who incidentally at a PhD in Engineering and had taken control of Nordhausen and Peenemunde, the Nazis had a breakthrough during the experimentation with a device called "The Bell." The Bell, or Der Glocke as it is sometimes known was a bell shaped device which was powered by Xerum 525 and have antigravity characteristics. It is important to not that a scant 21 years after the bell disappeared an object of similar shape and size crashed into a forest near Kecksburg, Pennsylvania.

Since this is about a conspiracy, it is also interesting to note that Kammler died approximately five times under different circumstances, but in reality it is believed that he took the bell and most of its scientists, after he killed all the technicians, to Base 211 which is covertly hidden under the ice in Antarctica. He apparently did this aboard several massive Junkers transport aircraft called the JU-390.

Interestingly the JU-390 with a cargo capacity in excess of 30,000lbs and a listed range of over 6000 miles would have been the right aircraft for the job and probably could have made it to Base 211 with a strategic refueling somewhere in Africa.

Based on the capabilities of the Bell propulsion system, the story goes the German scientists and flight engineers setup to construct a series of circular airframes which they called "The Haunebu."

According to the literature there were several variants of the Haunebu and there have even been pilots over the years who have come forward claiming to be former test pilots for the aircraft. There is even a line of thinking which proposed the it was not an alien craft which crashed at Roswell but instead was a crashed German shaped UFO.

Additional proof has been uncovered including a rather odd compass labeled "KT-P2" or the "Kreisel Teller" gyro plate which served as a celestially calibrated slave compass that would have impervious to the magnetic field distortion caused by the operation of the Bell.

Perhaps the most interesting proof to surface in recent years about the Bell and Haunebu came on the night of May 30, 2011 when Clyde Lewis, of Ground Zero Radio fame, was interviewing former Skunkworks engineer T.D. Barnes about his work at Area 51. During the interview Lewis asked Barnes pointedly about the Bell, and its final resting place. Barnes of course, and as you would expect, responded that he wasn't sure what Lewis was talking about and was unfamiliar with the name. Lewis pushed the issue and described the Bell and its operation to Barnes who responded that all that "German stuff" was sent to Wright Patterson AFB. Lewis, a little shocked at this point, asked him again about the Bell to which Barnes responded something to the effect of "yes that thing" was sent to Wright Patterson AFB.

Again independent confirmation of the existence of a Bell like device, and this time in the hands of the United States Government along with a whole host of other German high technology.

The story doesn't end there, normally it might but in this rare case we also have the end game or end objective of such a program.

End games are one of those things, every program or project has one—it has to. The ultimate objective and the source of its funding. See everything is done for a reason, and even in DARPA funding is not just handed out, you need an objective for your project or the purse strings are closed. It's also the most difficult thing to deduce since; at least in conspiracy research we have scant evidence and mostly secondary testimony. I think in conspiracy research we are also dazzled by the means but often pay no attention to the end, but the end is the reason for the means. So the research becomes circular.

In this case I do think we have a glimpse at the end game, and it goes back around to that mysterious 1977 broadcast, because for some reason the powers that be seem to subversively announce the game plan. I've never understood that, maybe it's to taunt us with glimpses of the larger agenda, but never the less we are given those glimpses.

Science Report: Alternative Three—what does that have to do with Solar Warden or Nazi UFOs you might ask? In my simple estimation of the situation, Everything.

If we look critically at the plot of Alternative Three we see a world on the tipping point of climatic disaster, in the case of Alternative Three the disaster is due to wild climate changes which bring about an Ice Age. The truth is that the disaster could really anything, such as a asteroid threat. A theme echoed in Ronald Reagan's 1987 speech before the United Nations General Assembly.

"In our obsession with antagonisms of the moment, we often forget how much unites all the members of humanity. Perhaps we need some outside, universal threat to make us recognize this common bond. I occasionally think how quickly our differences worldwide would vanish if we were facing an alien threat from outside this world"

Over the years that speech has widely been interpreted as referencing an alien threat such as big green multi-eyed monsters from Venus coming to take over the earth. This is especially true because of earlier comments he had made but what if, just for a minute, the alien threat was something else, and Reagan who was a shrewd politician obfuscated the true threat by cloaking it in UFO/Alien imagery.

To uncover this tangent of thinking we need to look at another quote, this time by famed physics superstar Neil deGrasse Tyson of the Hayden Planetarium:

"On Friday the 13th, April 2029, an asteroid large enough to fill the Rose Bowl as though it were an egg cup will fly so close to Earth that it will dip below the altitude of our communication satellites. We did not name this asteroid Bambi. Instead, we named it Apophis, after the Egyptian god of darkness and death."

Names mean something and as Tyson points out here Apophis is named after the Egyptian god of death and darkness. A coincidence? Probably not and incidentally the aftermath of Apophis, which Tyson points out in a FORA. tv interview, would be the literal sandblasting of the entire western coast of the United States.

The disaster could also be an oncoming ice age as well. In a

November 9th, 2012 article in The Register author Lewis Page discusses recent evidence that we are currently at the early stages of a coming ice age and this is the kicker, only CO2 can save us!

These ideas were also echoed by the father of the hydrogen bomb, and all around destroyer of worlds, Dr. Edward Teller who during a 1958 meeting of the American Chemical Society proposed the dumping of large amounts of very fine aluminum and other chemicals into the upper atmosphere to trigger a greenhouse effect to heat the world. Chemtrails anyone?

Ok so back to Alternative Three, we have something bad coming. Maybe its an asteroid, or a Ice Age both of which would be equally disastrous but really it doesn't matter. In both cases bad things happen and out of that were born three options:

1) The detonation of a high altitude nuclear device in the upper atmosphere to disrupt the world climate pattern. Most likely Project Argus which detonated nuclear devices at over 300 miles in altitude and was planned as well as executed in almost 1/3 of the time which was normally spent on such tests. In Alternative Three this was deemed a failure, and frankly I'm not surprised. It's a pretty harebrained idea right along with Operation Plowshares using nuclear bombs to make radioactive contaminated deep harbors and water canals.

2) To build underground bunkers, also deemed a failure since not enough of the population could be saved and frankly the surface would be pretty badly damaged in either scenario for quite some time. Never the less underground bunker construction continues as well as troop movements, mass purchases by the Department of Homeland Security of food, ammunition, and body bags (we'd need a lot of those, so its good to hear they bought several million!).

3) To leave and move somewhere else. Setup shop on the Moon and then colonize Mars. Apparently this program is underway which coincides with McKinnon's claimed uncovering of mass troop transports capable of carrying 300 or more people be they scientists or "Batch Consignment" slave labor.

Richard Sauder and others have documented the bunker building program quite well and I would suggest investigating their work. They make a seriously compelling argument that there is not only a massive underground network but even high-speed trains which run between the various facilities which dot the globe.

If Alternative Three is underway the establishment of a Solar Warden program in those deep special access programs is entirely feasible. We would need a space fleet to move things around as well as to prevent nasty things such as asteroid strikes from occurring. So in that way Solar Warden suddenly makes sense. Solar Warden coupled with Project Horizon's aims at a manned moon base really bring this idea of Alternative Three to the forefront and should be seriously considered.

Could we really do it? Could we really have a Moon base or Mars base? The answer is absolutely, and we need look no further then statements by Ben Rich, former head of the Lockheed Skunkworks, the same organization T.D. Barnes worked for.

"We now have the technology to take ET back home"

—Ben Rich 1993 UCLA School of Engineering Alumni Speech.

That is really a pretty compelling quote in relation to the revelations of Gary McKinnon, Alternative Three and Solar Warden, especially when we consider the source. Rich was a man who knew secrets, and worked his whole life and the penultimate secret state of Special Access Programs funded by the government and apparently designed to reach into space and to take E.T. home.

Is Alternative Three active? Is Solar Warden real? I think quite probably yes, and if that is the case and as the powers that be ramp up the program we will continue to see strange things in our skies and most likely if it is an oncoming ice age more aggressive chemtrail activity.

Don't get me wrong, I'm not advocating for chemtrails, but on the flip side no one has ever figured out the end game of chemtrails. Most researchers would just chalk it up to a secret government program which was bad, but there is always a reason especially for Geoengineering.

As humans everything we do has a reason and now we just need to confirm what that reason is. But it is that search for the endgame that is the hallmark of coming of age in the secret space race.

When we find that answer we will have graduated and as humans we will be in the full possession of the facts, the only problem is that graduation may come a little late this time.

3.

ALTERNATIVE 3–THE MOST DANGEROUS SHOW EVER PRODUCED

It all began innocently enough on a calm, cool Monday night. It was June 20, 1977 and as the residents of Anglia in the United Kingdom settled down for the evenings entertainment, the final touches were being put on the special broadcast of the night. It was the final broadcast of "Science Report," this time hosted by respected presenter Tim Brinton. It was to be a special broadcast indeed, a broadcast originally scheduled for April of 1977, but was delayed until this night. A delay which would prove decisive in its impact, and a delay one could argue was built into its presentation for shock value as well as plausible deniability.

So on that quiet English evening at 9pm sharp residents of East Anglia tuned into Science Report planning on watching an expose about the concerning "brain drain" of highly trained and educated researchers and technicians leaving England for positions abroad.

Not to be disappointed, as the show began Tim Brinton emerged from the shadows to inform the public as to the real nature of those departures. Departures made from the international terminal, terminal two, at Heathrow Airport for destinations unknown.

What happened over the next hour has become the stuff of legend as the normally quiet and unprepared English country side was gripped by panic. Images of disease, starvation and war filled their screens. Brinton's cold delivery of the apocalyptic future of global climate collapse, dwindling resources, and ultimately a darkened world plunged into a new Ice Age.

Brinton, a respected presenter, spoke of high level government plans, made the world over, to attempt to stave off this hideous future. Government scientists of the time had come up with three alternatives hoping to save the world. The first, after seeing the build up green house gases, was to attempt to create holes in the upper atmosphere and vent climate changing carbon dioxide into the space, but we were told that plan failed categorically.

The second alternative, we are told, was to aggressively accelerate the construction of massive underground cities to move the population underground, a program which was already well underway as the world was in the grips of the Cold War. We were told this program, although continuing to this day, was deemed inadequate and only a few could be saved but not enough to warrant a large scale program. Those not able to find refuge in the underground facilities, we are told, would be left to perish on the surface.

The final alternative, which much have seemed almost insane to an unprepared public, was to construct a way station on the moon which could be used to ferry people as well as slaves or “Batch Consignments” to a waiting Mars where humanity could begin again. The rest of the population would be left on Earth to perish.

This final alternative, Alternative Three, was considered so audacious that it demanded support from governments around the world. Support, we are to believe, that was given as the show culminates in the man landing on Mars of a join Soviet and American mission. And in a final twist, as the landing is occurring the crew of the Lander detects life in the form of a small organism moving around in the dirt adjacent to the landing site. Live had been discovered they cry, all the wile Russian and English reading on the Martian service scroll across the screen.

The show ended and the population of East Anglia was in full blown panic. By 10pm calls started to fill the switchboard at East Anglia Television with Irate viewers demanding to know if what they just watched was true? The response? East Anglia representatives informed the public that the show was fiction and that it had originally been scheduled for April 1st, 1977 but due to labor issues it had been preempted. A response which did not satisfy most callers at that time and which even now fails to satisfy those who have seen the film 35 years on!

As the sun rose of the United Kingdom on June 21st, the controversy was already spreading throughout the country. The Daily Express, as well as numerous other newspapers were reporting on the preceding evening, and while pointing out that some of the actors were well known, such as Richard Marner who played Carl Gerstein or Shane Rimmer who played the tragic astronaut Bob Grodin, they demanded to understand how the show had been allowed to have been made. How something so terrifying and damaging to public perception had been produced, and passed the censors. The answer to that is surprising, but we need to get back to our story.

As the aftermath spread more newspapers joined the siren call for accountability papers such as The Times who reported "Independent television companies last night received hundreds of protest calls after an Anglia program, Alternative 3, gave alarming facts about changes in the Earth's atmosphere. It was a hoax, originally intended for April 1st" but also they joined the call for accountability. East Anglia responded by pointing out that it was intended as a April Fools joke, and even people connected to the production call it a hoax to this day.

The furor eventually prompted East Anglia Television to respond. A response some considered lackluster but in part simply read “We felt viewers would be fairly sophisticated about it.” Which considering the amount of controversy generated seems to be a little underwhelming. But the story continues.

In the aftermath of its initial showing, and largely due to the overwhelming negative response and fear which it perpetuated laws started to be past barring it from being shown again, and preventing shows like this from being aired.

The first casualty was the UK where it had originated, then Australia, with Canada following suit passing strict regulation against “War of the Worlds” style programming, or at least programming so realistic that the mass population would be incited hysteria and terror.

This culminated in the attempted airing of Alternative Three on US Television, because as it turns out that the head of NBC drama had been in Anglia at the time and witnessed the film. He was so taken with the presentation that he acquired the rights to air the film in the US, but upon presenting Alternative Three to Standards and Practices, the censors of NBC, he was informed that Alternative Three was too dangerous for US television. Yes the censors said it was too dangerous for television, you heard that right. The censors wanted to save the United States public from such a terrifying spectacle.

Building on the controversy, Sphere Books commissioned a Alternative Three book to be written by Leslie Watkins the following year. The book was to expand the “hoax” even further, pushing an already sensitive public over the breaking point. Late in 1978 with the book published , the legend of Alternative Three was set in stone.

The book, by Leslie Watkins and “co-authored” by Christopher

Miles and David Ambrose, for copyright reasons, pushed the envelope even further with interviews from supposed insiders, and analysis of headlines which seemed to support the Alternative Three presentations.

What's interesting about this story is that for everyone involved is that while the production team concede it was a hoax, they also concede, most notably Christopher Miles and Leslie Watkins, that it appears they stumbled across an actual program which has the tacit support of governments around the globe.

The most interesting story came from Watkins himself who, in a email exchange, pointed out that while moving from Australia to his new home in New Zealand someone or some group of someones had pilfered his cargo container and taken all of his Alternative Three source material. Yes, someone went through his shipment and removed all of the Alternative Three documentation. Watkins has also claimed in subsequent years that he has been contacted by numerous "insiders" confirming the basic premise and the existence of an extra governmental program to adopt the Alternative Three methodology and effectively executing Alternative Three. Those insiders went on to confirm for him that bases on the Moon and Mars are real and that we travel there regularly especially as the environment here on Earth worsens.

Hearing things like this from the makers of the TV presentation and well as the book really make you stop and wonder.

The larger question is that, at least for Miles and Ambrose, where did they story originate? Did they really cook up this exotic program and accidentally stumble on the truth as they claim, or were was the premise suggested to them? What I will say is that in a post- Alternative Three world everyone involved went on to great things. David Ambrose continued to write with some acclaim, Miles was a staple in the direction of TV shows and movies with some nice feathers in his cap. Tim Brinton, the presenter turned actor turned presenter, ended up in Parliament. And of course Brian Eno who supplied the music is widely seen as one of the founders of the ambient music movement. The only casualty appears to be Watkins who has basically disappeared and is not easy locatable.

But the story continues to grow stranger, and more sinister at every turn. A consistent element in this 35-year-long journey.

As the years went on, Alternative Three slipped away from the popular imagination. The 1970s wore on into the 1980s and Alternative Three was just a side note, but in the intervening time Anglia Television went through a series of changes culminating in its conversion to ITV and the joining of the vast Rupert Murdoch media complex. But something was wrong, where was Alternative Three in all this? Lost from the populace and not able to be shown, it disappeared.

At one point there was a fire, and during the fire all known copies of the Alternative Three master were destroyed with the exception of Miles' personal copy.

It wasn't only the film which went up in smoke, it was also all the documentation. It was as though the film had never existed! So today if you contact ITV and request a copy of the film you are quite pleasantly told it was destroyed, but there's a rub. On occasion the request is fulfilled and at least once a researcher was able to get a pure DVD copy from a master even after being informed of its destruction.

So what gives?

What we do know is that the film's destruction produced a black market for twelfth generation copies of this secret television show and for the last say 20 years that is where we have been. The film is shown off bad VHS dubs in the dark steamy movie rooms at conventions and lightly debated. Every so often it is even aired in Japan, the only country it seems where no one banned it.

So what you have is a television show where even the principals claim to have stumbled on a secret truth. A television show which cannot be shown on public television. A film which was destroyed, and even if you can locate such a copy it cannot be aired.

This goes back to the primary problem with Alternative Three, and the genesis of this conversation. It's my contention that while Alternative Three, the television show and subsequent book were indeed a hoax or more accurately in today's jargon a "mockumentary," the blue print is fundamentally correct and Alternative Three was fundamentally a massive predictive programming exercise to prepare the population for a coming societal breakdown.

We need look no further then the headlines of the day to find wars, starvation, and ecological collapse. Wars and rumors of wars dominate our headlines. Stories of resource scarcity and rising fuel prices change our world view, and to prophecies such a massive collapse in 1977 was unheard of. The 1970s were a decade of decadence, and only now in the 21st century are we a world reaping what we sowed.

But more importantly is not what is in the headlines but what is being talked about in quiet voices in those dark halls of the conspiracy world. Rumors of secret space programs are pervasive and the cooling of relations with Russia, as well as the proliferation of nuclear weapons concern the public. Terrorism is on the lips of most western leaders.

All these things serve to scare us, to produce a strategy of tension where we cry out to our leaders to save us but they don't. Instead they endlessly debate the outcome. All the while the blueprint laid out in Alternative Three is quietly executed.

Underground bunkers continue to be built for a war the planners admit will never come. Discussion of a coming ice age brought about by global warming is subversively debated. All these things lead to one ultimate end. Alternative Three is real.

Alternative Three is a blueprint, and its apocalyptic vision is coming. Most importantly we finally can find the end game. All those things we endlessly debate in conspiracy circles finely have a motivation. Subjects that had no purpose come into view, and are clarified. For once we see a clear end game on where it's all heading and someone, somewhere is preparing for Alternative Three's apocalyptic vision to come to pass.

Figure 1 Tim Brinton Shows Us Soviet and U.S. Landing Sites on the Moon

Figure 2 Gregory Munroe, Carol Hazell and Tim Brinton

Figure 3 Gregory Munroe and Shane Rimmer During Filming

Figure 4 Richard Crafter, Gregory Munroe, David Baxt and Phoebe Nicholls

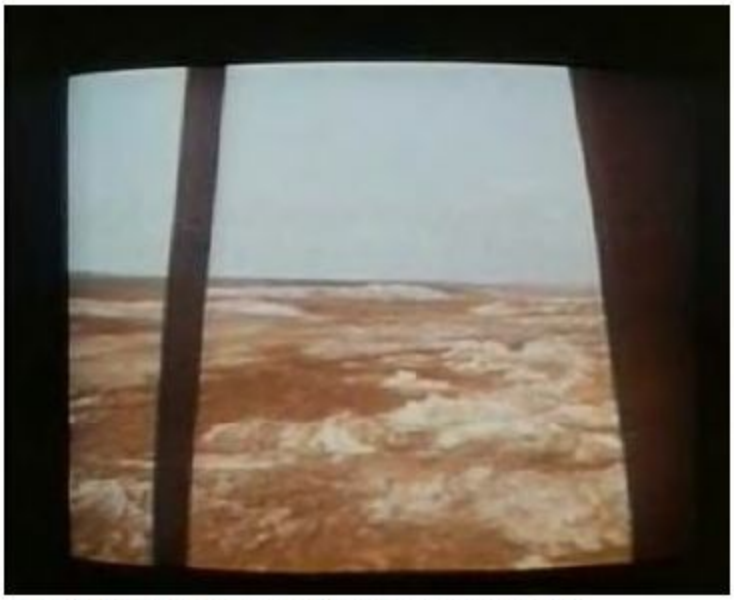

Figure 5 Mars Landscape From Manned Lander (From the Film)

4.

ALTERNATIVE 1— THINGS GO BOOM

What's amazing about Alternative Three is the downright plausibility of the whole operation. If the plan is real, its rationality is fundamentally beyond reproach. The best part is it all starts with a bang.

The base concept behind the first alternative is a desperate gambit to use a high altitude nuclear blast to create a hole in the upper atmosphere to empty the greenhouse gases into space. To the 21st century line of thinking this option sounds borderline insane, largely because as we have progressed technologically and socially we know this will not work. However, if you remove yourself from conventional thinking and go backwards in time, this makes perfect sense.

Let us not forget that the same military planners and scientists who may have conceived of these options were the same individuals who came up with "Operation Plowshares." What is that, you ask? That was a military funded program to use nuclear weapons to create artificial deep water harbors. The only catch was that after the bomb was successfully detonated, and a perfect deep water harbor was formed, there was so much radioactivity that the site was unusable for the next 2,000 years. In the final review "Plowshares" failed, but the attempt was made nonetheless.

So what was the real Alternative One? The operation's name was "Project Argus" and it was both a failure and a success. As with many things in this realm there is a duality of success and failure, which seem to occur simultaneously.

Project Argus in particular was a secret series of nuclear weapons tests secretly conducted by the Navy during August and September of 1958.

The tests were performed over the Southern Atlantic Ocean and administered by the U.S. Defense Nuclear Agency in conjunction with the Explorer 4 mission.

Military contractors from Lockheed as well as some personnel and contractors from the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission were on hand as well to oversee the project.

What is interesting about Project Argus is that the time frame for Project Argus was vastly expedited. This was ostensibly due to the political environment of the era and the upcoming bans on atmospheric and exoatmospheric testing. A case could also be made for the acceleration due to Argus being part of the Alternative Three program.

As a result, the tests were conducted within six months of conception, versus a normal test program which could take upwards of one to two years for complete mission planning and authorization. This project, however, was fast-tracked.

In order to expedite the project, the United States Navy formed a special task force called “Task Force 88” or “TF-88.” The taskforce was formed April 28, 1958 solely to conduct Project Argus. Once Project Argus was completed, the task force was dissolved, and conveniently the task force’s records were dispersed which has made reconstruction of their mission much more difficult. This seems to be par for the course with a project such as this and lends credence to the covert nature of their mission.

Conveniently, most of Task Force 88’s records have been destroyed or lost over time. This is not the only time such records have been misplaced. Interestingly, among the missing documents is the entirety of the film records.

So who was involved?

The USS Norton Sound was responsible for actual missile launching. She was also the training facility for launch crews involved in the testing, because the X-17A missiles used in the test were unfamiliar to the crew. These were typical exercises apparently, from known literature, including the assembly and repair of dummy missiles to be used. The Norton Sound also carried a 27-MHz COZI radar, which was interestingly operated by the Air Force Cambridge Research Center. This radar system was used to monitor the effects of the launches and detonations. It seems like all the armed forces were involved!

The USS Albemarle was not listed as part of TF-88 but still participated. She set out to the Atlantic under cover of a shakedown cruise but was apparently tasked with detecting man-made ionization caused by the tests.

The USS Tarawa functioned as the command and control ship for the mission, with her commander serving as Task Group Commander. The Tarawa carried an Air Force MSQ-1A radar and communication system designed for missile tracking. She also carried several VS-32 aircraft tasked with search and security operations as well as functioning as platforms for scientific measurement, photographic, and observer missions for each launch. The HS-5 was also aboard to provide transportation for personnel and cargo.

The USS Warrington, as well as the USS Bearss, USS Hammerberg and USS Courtney were assigned as a weather picket about 460 kilometers west of the task force. They also provided air cover for the USS Tarawa during launch operations, and carried out surface security and search and rescue. The USS Warrington also carried dart rockets so the taskforce was very well armed, for a scientific mission.

The USS Neosho was tasked with refueling task force ships during the mission. She was also outfitted with Air Force MSQ-1A radar. The Neosho's commanding officer also served as the Task Group Commander for TG 88.3, the Mobile Logistics Group, which consisted of: Neosho, equipped with USAF MSQ-1 radar and communication vans, USS Salamonie (AO-26), and assigned destroyers. Oddly the USS Salamonie returned to the United States shortly after her arrival at TF-88, and did not participate in any launches.

The Tests

About 1,800 kilometers southwest of the coast of Cape Town, South Africa, USS Norton Sound launched three modified X-17A missiles, each armed with 1.7 kt W-25 nuclear warheads into the upper atmosphere, where high altitude nuclear explosions, the highest altitude nuclear tests incidentally, took place.

What's interesting about the location chosen is that due to the "South Atlantic Anomaly," the Van Allen radiation belt is closer to the Earth's surface at that point then any other location on the Earth.

As part of the test, highly coordinated measurements involving satellite, rocket, aircraft, and surface stations were employed as well as other government agencies and various contractors worldwide. For such a rapidly prepared test there was an inordinate amount of monitoring which took place. The primary reason was that the scientists need to know very quickly if the desired effect was indeed taking place.

Conventionally, the Project Argus tests were proposed by scientist Nicholas Christofilos who was at that time part of the Lawrence Radiation Laboratory, now known as the Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory. The test was a means to verify the proposed Christofilos effect. Christofilos had argued that such high-altitude nuclear detonations should create a radiation belt in the extreme upper levels of the Earth's atmosphere. Such belts would be similar in effect to the Van Allen radiation belts. The radiation belts were believed to have possible tactical use in a war.

Argus was able to prove Christofilos' theory but was unable to provide the actual desired result, which was to open a hole in the upper atmosphere to vent carbon dioxide and other "greenhouse" gases into space. This component of the test utterly failed, and proved to be the downfall of Alternative One.

Interestingly the New York Times first reported the tests on March 19, 1959, with a headline bearing the awesome headline "Greatest Scientific Experiment Ever Conducted." Although the tests were announced the following year, the full results and documentation of the tests were not declassified until April 30, 1982. It was declassified more then 20 years after the tests took place. Seems odd that the "Greatest scientific experiment ever conducted" was classified for more than 20 years.

Figure 6 X17 ROCKET FROM PROJECT ARGUS

Figure 7 X17 MISSILE FIRING—PROJECT ARGUS

5.

ALTERNATIVE 1.5— GEOENGINEERING, CHEMTRAILS, AND GLOBAL DIMMING

The scene around the table at the Alternative One post mortem must have been a sight to see. I suspect you could hear a pin drop as the project scientists scrambled to recover. So much faith must have been placed into the feasibility of Alternative One because by its very nature, Alternative One would have been the easier, least damaging, method to correct the problem.

The failure of Project Argus to deliver the desired result must have been catastrophic because now the military planners had to struggle to find other alternatives: Other alternatives which would yield a smaller and smaller survival group and inversely cost more and more money to attempt and sustain. Not to mention the human capital required to build and support the infrastructure.

The other problem which the planners must have faced was the realization that Alternatives Two and Three would take decades to prepare. This meant a more complex conspiracy now had to be put into place, all the while those same planners had to engineer a way to stabilize the weather while these other alternatives were prepared. The answer was simple, and it wasn't HAARP or "weather machines." No, it was something far simpler but of a scale never before attempted. Their solution to this problem? What we call "chemtrails" today.

Chemtrails started to come into the public imagination as a conspiracy topic in the mid 1990s. With the advent of the internet, individuals from around the world started to congregate and share data showing strange persistent contrails being released from aircraft as they flew overhead. It was a story that grabbed the public imagination and sent shock waves of fear through the populace as theories started to filter through in the public space.

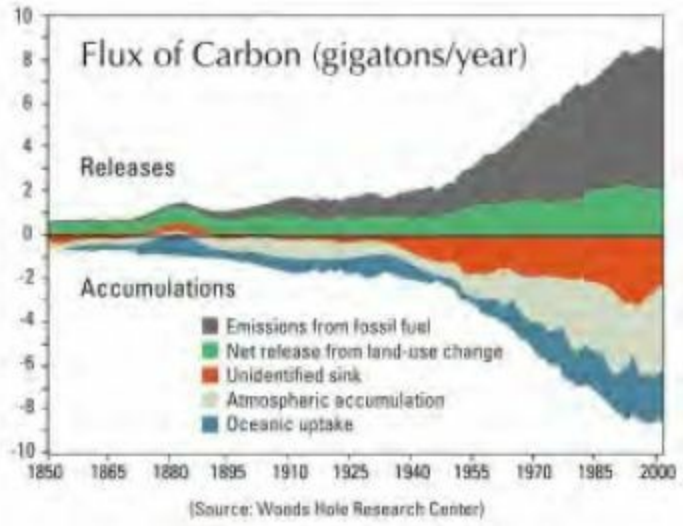
Theories ranged from mind control to depopulation and about everything in between. Websites started to spring up and by the early 2000s, chemtrails had become an obsession to many in the public who sought to understand what was going on in the skies overhead.

The search was on. Who was doing this? Were those military or commercial aircraft? There was a concerted effort to find the squadrons, the pilots and the designers of these things called chemtrails.

As with many things conspiratorial, the true story starts long before the story gripped the international public with panic. It is a story much older and probably more disconcerting then any of the sometimes outlandish theories which have been presented to date and like many things the story is probably not as complicated as we, the conspiracy demanding public, want to believe.



The story starts in the late 1950s with a meeting on the American Chemical Society. During that meeting a consensus was reached that industrialization was producing a massive increase in carbon dioxide and other damaging gasses. At the same time Roger Revelle, of the Scripps Institute of Oceanography, discovered that the world's oceans could no longer keep up with the amount of ambient gasses building up in the atmosphere. The magnificent natural air scrubbers of the ocean were falling further and further behind. Revelle's research found at the oceans could only handle a mere 10 percent of the original estimation of greenhouse gases in the atmosphere during the 1960s.

In short, we had a problem. As Revelle wrote "Human beings are now carrying out a large scale geophysical experiment of a kind that could not have happened in the past nor be reproduced in the future." The experiment would inevitably lead to a large-scale greenhouse condition. That condition would in turn heat up the entire planet, amongst other things. In effect Revelle discovered what we now call "global warming," also known as "climate change."

Revelle's discovery lead to Alternative 1.5—an audacious plan to geoengineer our planet out of an impending and catastrophic total system failure. This alternative was the next logical outcome from the failure of Alternative 1's Project Argus/Hardtrak which was designed to vent the gasses to space.

It is important to note that Argus did succeed in demonstrating that artificial Van Allen style radiation belts could be generated with high altitude nuclear detonations. It was a strategy which could deflect oncoming solar radiation or serve to bolster the ever weakening Van Allen radiation belts, but its primary objective still failed.

Starting in 1957 there was a rush to solve the problem. Patents started to be filed from US2730402A, which represented an aerosol dispersal device, to US2908442A, which was a method for the dispersion of natural atmospheric fogs and clouds. Eventually the doctrine of geoengineering seemed to move in the direction of "Solar Radiation Management." This is a process by which a reflective material such as aluminum would be scattered at high altitude to change the albedo, or reflectivity, of the Earth causing less light energy to make it to the surface of the Earth. The effect is called "Global dimming."

It should also be mentioned that if over your life span you believe the world has gotten strangely darker, you would be correct. As these geoengineering programs are more and more active the surface of the Earth will become darker in order to control and stabilize the global ambient temperature.

By the 1970s even more papers were being written on the subject, mostly advocating for the continued use of metallic particles in the upper atmosphere. As time went on the support of this idea continued to grow.

In 1997 Dr. Edward Teller, the father of the hydrogen bomb, penned a piece in the venerable Wall Street Journal called "Sunscreen for Planet Earth." In that article, Teller points out that this is an extra-governmental problem which needs to be addressed globally. It's an attitude which garnered the support of physicist Freeman Dyson (the man behind the Dyson Sphere concept). But it was a problem detected in the late 1950s, and by the time this paper was written the vast geoengineering project was most likely well under way.

So where are we today?

Like many things in the conspiracy universe, we as researchers tend to over complicate the issue. We find a need to make these kinds of programs much more devious and complicated then they really are. I think that's a natural inborn process of the human mind deciphering complex issues, but chemtrails are real nevertheless.

I think the simple answer to this question is that we are well into the program. One of the key patents I discovered which leads be to believe this is Patent 5003186, called "Stratospheric Welsbach seeding for reduction of global warming," a very interesting patent which came out of Hughes Aircraft Company in 1990. The patent also references older patents from 1965 and 1988.

The patent appears to be an act of evolution, not revolution, and deals with the types of materials used to produce the global dimming effect. This patent would not necessarily be as useful if the program was not already underway.

Another case in point was research conducted during the groundings after the 9/11 attack. During that time, aircraft, except for military aircraft, were grounded all across the United States.

This presented atmospheric scientists with a unique window into an un-contrail effected sky and the results were staggering. In the hours after the grounding, as the contrails began to dissipate, the scientists found a 1.1 degree Celsius increase in ambient ground level temperature over the 1974-2001 recorded numbers.

This is important for several reasons. Number one, it shows that larger scale geoengineering started in the early 1970s and the second is that they have been able to stave off at least one degree for almost 30 years. What is also of import is that that one degree represented only four days without jet exhaust. If we were to go weeks, months or years the ambient ground temperature would rise more significantly, maybe 10 or more degrees. In fact the reports show that the overall air temperature was 1.8 degrees higher then the previous six days. That is a massive increase in temperature.

So what does this really mean?

If there is a large scale geoengineering project underway, which I think the 9/11 results prove, it is not a new thing. In face the artist Prince, in an interview on BET, discussed chemtrails and his observation of them as a child in Minnesota. Given his age that would put his observations in the 1970s (Prince was born in 1955 so if we assume he was 15 would place the date around 1970).

This project has been underway for at least 30 years or more. Probably early on the aerosol dispersal was on a trial basis, which would account for some normal contrails and some persisting contrails. At this point I would believe whatever additive is being used to produce this phenomenon is generically placed into the jet fuel since more and more the contrails seem to persist. This would explain why you cannot find a specific culprit, because there is none. They are all producing the problem.

It is also important to note that since 2000, Alzheimer's disease has increased by 63 percent and that aluminum in the brain and long term exposure to aluminum is one factor in the progress of Alzheimer's. This would coincide with the increased use of metallic, possibly aluminum, particles used as part of the program.

The Good, the Bad, and the Ugly

Of course this kind of project presents a huge problem. On one hand the program, if it exists which I think you can argue, has carried out its mission to stabilize our climate. The bad on the other hand is that it carries with it risks such has Alzheimer's and other unforeseen catastrophic medical issues like Morgellons disease.

The ugly truth is that without it we have an uncertain climate problem. At this point climate change is upon us. Manmade or natural the outcome is the same—the production of a greenhouse environment with wild weather patterns, unreliable resources, and massive heat. I'm not saying chemtrails are good, far from it but what I am saying is what they are—simply an attempt to control the global climate, albeit conceived in desperation.

What the chemtrails are not is a depopulation bomb, mind control, or global toxification. If these were the objectives then mass kills would be far more common place and the cover-up of such an extensive project would be almost impossible. This program is being concealed in the open and without the willing participation of pilots, ground crews or anyone else.

The aircrews and aircraft are a passive delivery agent, which is the very reason finding the culprit has been almost impossible because on a mass scale there is no culprit per say. Things like mind control are more easily executed through the water supply, which contains large amounts of birth control drugs, mood stabilizers, and other things. Your water, which is the ultimate delivery mechanism, is like a pharmacopeia of mood stabilizers, anti depressants and all kinds of other things.

Good, bad, right, or wrong that is what is it is. Each individual has to make their own assessment of the morality of such an undertaking but the undertaking itself, the program, is probably numerical and amoral in nature.

I doubt during those conversations, wherever they were had, the issue of morality or even long term consequences was discussed. It was probably a purely an analytical discussion of cause and effect. The one thing to keep in mind is that long term this will probably push us into an ice age. I know that sounds crazy, and I will save that for another time but long term I believe we are probably going to head into an ice age, which is precisely the warning from Alternative Three.

Figure 8 Roger Revelle (Source—Cambridge From Speakers)

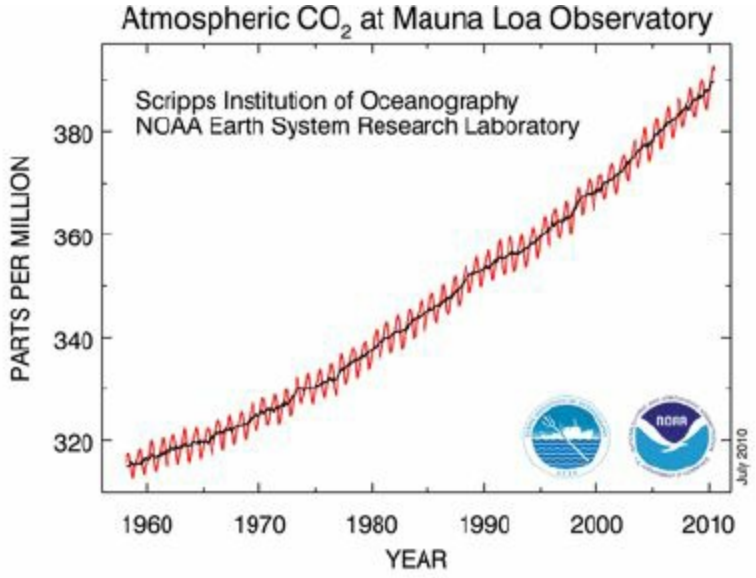

Figure 9 Source—NOAA

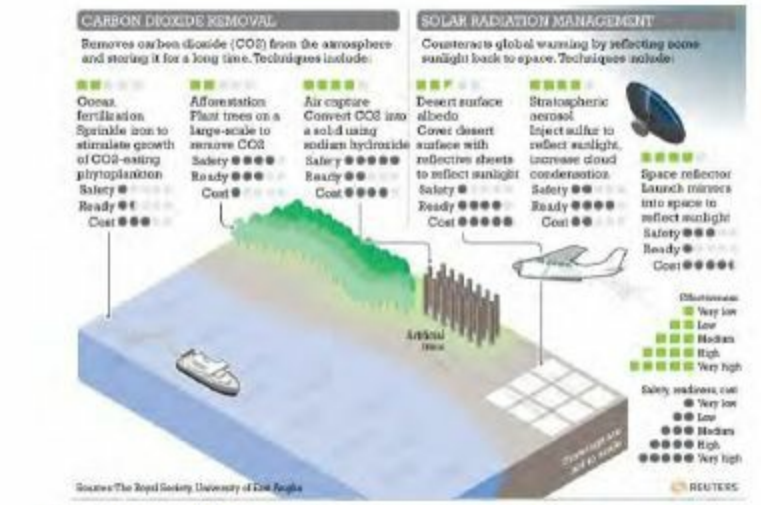

Figure 10 Options for Climate Modification (Copyright The Royal Society / REUTERS)

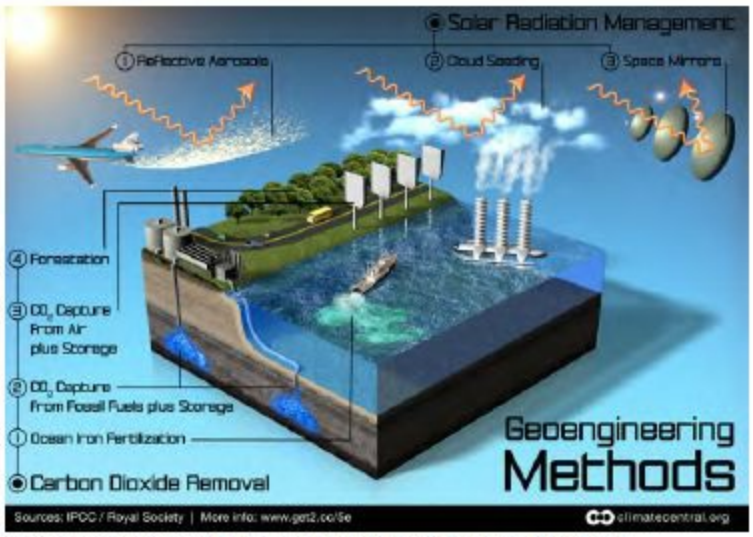

Solar Radiation Management
1 Reflective Aerosols
2 Cloud Seeding
3 Space Mirrors
4 Forestation
3 CO_2 Capture From Air plus Storage
2 CO_2 Capture from Fossil Fuels plus Storage
1 Ocean Iron Fertilization
Carbon Dioxide Removal
Geoengineering Methods
Sources: IPCC / Royal Society | More info: www.get2.co/6e
climatecentral.org
Figure 11 GeoEngienering Methods (Copyright Royal Society/IPCC)

6.

ALTERNATIVE TWO—D.U.M.B PROJECTS AND THE END OF THE WORLD

The story thus far has been one of failure and stabilization. Alternative One, aka Project Argus, failed to vent the greenhouse gases into space. Its catastrophic failure appears to have moved the "planners" forward to a strategy of containment and stabilization while Alternative two was brought into place. With the climate stabilization they bought time for the next two options.

Alternative Two was conceived, in the 1950s, as a project to construct D.U.M.B's or Deep Underground Military Bunkers so as to move a meager percentage of the population into these underground facilities. This project appears to be ongoing, and if Alternative Three is to be believed then it will probably continue to the very end. It is a scenario which appears to make a fair amount of sense since both Alternative Two and Alternative Three are designed to save only the precious few.

The evidence for Alternative Two is ever present around us, and the preparations are mind boggling in their scope. What is interesting about Alternative Two and a strategy of underground living spaces is that within the conspiracy literature to date there are many references to a magic population number of 500 million. This number is brought up in relation to Agenda 21, the so-called depopulation agenda, as well as on the Georgia Guidestones.

The Guidestones are particularly interesting because they clearly define the population goal of 500 million to live in harmony with nature. Could it be that the planners decided that an ice-encrusted earth could only support 500 million people globally? It would certainly appear so.

In searching for evidence of a doomsday plan being enacted, with international cooperation, we need look no further then the Nordic Seed Vault or better known at the Svalbard Global Seed Vault.

The Seed Vault was constructed in 2006 and subsequently opened in 2008. It is located in the remote Arctic Svalbard archipelago on the island of Spitsburgen and is buried 390 feet into a sandstone mountain on the island. It was chosen both for its remoteness, tectonic stability as well as being encased in permafrost which lends itself well to preservation of the seeds. The vault is also located 430 feet above sea level to offset the coming sea rise caused by the implementation of Alternative 1.5, which has produced a net global temperature increase.

Officially the Svalbard Global Seed Vault's objective is to provide a "safety net" against the global loss of diversity in international gene pools. The press has emphasized its possible use as a resource during a major regional or global catastrophe. Events, which appear to be occurring with more regularity as war and civil uprisings, have destroyed some regional gene banks. A case in point, the national seed bank located in the Philippines was almost destroyed by flooding and later was destroyed by a fire; seed banks in Afghanistan and Iraq were lost completely due to war.

However the Nordic Seed Vault is not alone, and there are several more either built or being planned around the world. All fit a similar model, and could theoretically be used to reconstitute a global ecosystem post catastrophic event.

There are still other well known bunker complexes such as The Oakville Bunker, the infamous Site R, or Mt. Weather which could easily maintain fairly large populations in a subterranean existence for years if not decades. These facilities exist all over the world. It is also important to point out that bunker complexes such as Site R and Mt. Weather are designed to potentially hold thousands of people.

In Norway there is the Sentralanlegget, in France there is a hardened facility in Taverny and of course in the United Kingdom there is Whitehall. Each facility was born out of the days of the cold war, but retrofitted today for an impending apocalypse either man made or natural and constantly expanded to house more people.

Of course the most famous or rather infamous facility of recent times, the Denver Airport which along with the rumors of governmental agency migration to the Denver area makes it appear again that something is being planned for. The Denver Airport facility has been rumored to plunge some 20 levels below the surface.

Officially many of these sites are classified as Continuity of Government facilities or COG's but in reality they are doomsday bunkers which are being prepared as part of Alternative Two.

This would also be consistent with the secrecy surrounding them, as no specific details are known about these facilities outside a strange footnote to Site-R which apparently enjoys its own Starbucks. The Starbucks has apparently been equipped with enough coffee to supply the caffeine habit of the underground dwellers for some 10 years. It has also been leaked at Site-R also has an internal gift shop. And they said the apocalypse couldn't be comfortable…

Also included in the Alternative Two planning is the supposed nationwide hidden underground rail network. It is an interlocking magnetic levitation train network which links these sites, located all over the United States.

Originally proposed by the RAND Corporation in the 1960s, the rail network was supposedly completed in the 1980s and utilized a vacuum based rail system which allows the trains to move between various points very rapidly at least as fast as a commercial jetliner, if not slightly faster.

In the end run you could consider Alternative Two fundamentally a failure since it could and will never sustain a large enough population to cover even a decent percentage of the United States population. It is based on that assumption which has lead to the development of the so-called FEMA camps.

So how do the FEMA camps or things like Operation Gladio fit into this? That answer is simple. As the impending global disaster takes shape, the governments of the world will seek to maintain order, especially since the vast majority of the population will be left to their own devices for survival. The presence of large, prison style, complexes could be used in an attempt to round up agitators and keep the population docile as the government struggles to maintain order and relevancy as the world dips further into cataclysm.

Organizations like Operation Gladio on the other hand could be utilized as private off the books paramilitary organizations which not only establish a new order of things but also could be used to establish an ordered and disciplined, all be it ideologically fascist, pseudo government as the actual government implodes.

During the cold war, Gladio and its sister organizations adopted a mentality similar to the concept used by Otto Skorzeny with the Werewolves of formally Nazi Germany. The public premise of Gladio and the Werewolf units was as a leave behind army which would disrupt communications, carry out partisan style anti-occupier attacks, but that same model could be used as a control mechanism for the public during the societal disintegration, especially since their known objectives include the creation of the Fourth Reich.

This would also substantiate the recent reports of FEMA, a organization designed to support U.S. citizens in the event of a catastrophe, has been buying massive amounts of ammunition, body bags and MREs (Meals Ready to Eat). FEMA is planning for something big, but no doubt they will collapse along with the rest of the government.

All these little pieces seem to add up to a larger plan. A plan to sustain underground living for at least a percentage of the population for some amazing and indefinite period. What's also interesting about Alternative Two, at least to those practitioners of the venerable analysis of "predictive programming" is that recently, within the last few years several movies have come out which portray the Alternative Two scenario. These include the film "The Colony" as well as the older film "Quintet." Both show a massive ice age and the struggle to survive it.

In "The Colony," we seem humanity struggling to survive in large subterranean complexes, which in the movie appear to have been above ground once but are now below the ice. In "Quintet" we see a large human population trying to ride out of the ice age in the remnants of a massive archeology.

Even the venerable Anime from the 1980s "Robotech" showed Denver buried under a glacier and the struggle of humans to survive that environment.

Figure 12 NORDIC SEED VAULT ENTERANCE

Figure 13 NORDIC SEEDVAULT CONTAINERS

Figure 14 RAVENROCK (SITE-R) PORTAL A/B

Figure 15 RAVENROCK (SITE-R) PORTAL C/D

Figure 16 RAVENROCK (SITE-R) COMMUNICATIONS ARRAY

Figure 17 MT. WEATHER (FEMA)

7.

ALTERNATIVE 2.5—AGENDA 21, THE POPULATION BOMB, AND THE GEORGIA GUIDESTONES

For many years one of the staple principles in the conspiracy lexicon was the massive depopulation by the powers that be. The idea was that the Earth was, deemed by someone, to only adequately support about 500 million people and through attrition (i.e., starvation, war, and genocide) the powers that be would target that population for an ongoing rate. As defined in modern conspiracy literature it effectively meant that around 6.5 billion (with a B) people would have to be exterminated by some means.

The emphasis on Agenda 21 could also be the slow reduction of the population in order to better support the leaves behinds of Alternative Three. If large portions of the population are going to be left behind, and Alternative Two is unable to support them, it would make sense to reduce the population to maximize resources for those of humanity are left.

This motif was perpetuated by the Georgia Guidestones which clearly outline that the population needs to be at 500 million to co-exist with nature, or something to that effect. Now what's the importance of that? Well the Georgia Guide Stones have long been seen as a sort of handbook, carved into stone, as to the near future plans of the power that be. But there is a problem and that is the crux of my article.

No one in the conspiracy meme will argue you with you that a depopulation program exists, in the west. We look out towards Agenda 21, a United Nations sponsored initiative to create sustainable populations. The Georgia Guidestones address it as well, and we've had the provocative statements made by Prince Phillip, who apparently would like to return and be reincarnated as a virus to further snuff out a large population.

Even Bill Gates took the provocative stance of releasing tainted mosquitos in a conference to drive the point home. But in all the literature, at least what I've seen, it seems to discuss "humanity" or human populations and I think we need to actually understand what that means. I know it sounds simple, but I think the truth is far darker then Agenda 21, or any of the conventional machinations of depopulation conspiracy.

The issue here is that Agenda 21 and the depopulation meme are already at work here in the west. Forbes published an article in April, 2012 called "Warning Bell for Developed Countries: Declining Birth Rates" with a subtitle of "There will be a shift in power unless birth rates increase in the developed world." The gist of the article is that in most western developed countries our population rates are now almost static with total fertility rates of 2.1 or 2.0 which apparently is effectively replacement rate.

Why birthrates in the west are declining is also an interesting discussion, and branches off into the fact that birth control drugs have been found to taint most of the water supplies in the developed countries, along with anti-depressants and a host of other interesting drugs. Which seems like the depopulation program is underway and is being done via attrition, meaning we make fewer children than people who die.

So if total fertility rates are declining in the west, where is this massive depopulation going to occur? The answer is the third world, or is it?

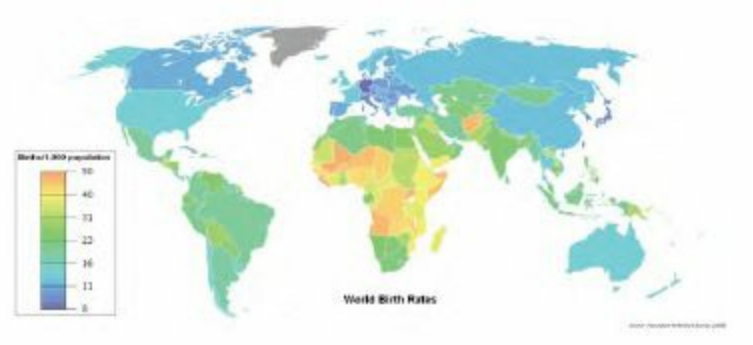
Giving this a lot of thought, and if you look at the population growth maps most of the population growth now occurring in the world is occurring in Sub-Saharan Africa and South America. Now this is interesting because of their proximity to developed country zones of North America, Europe, and Asia. If you look at the map it becomes really obvious.



So what's the game plan here? The developed world is self-shrinking while the less developed countries are exploding?

When I was younger there was a game many of us used to play called Cyberpunk. It was the 1990s and Cyberpunk was all the rage. So R. Talsorian games came out with a rather interesting dystopian game to answer the demand. Cyberpunk was set in a future a little further then our own, where the network was alive with virtual reality and weapons had become very interesting. It had a kind of Blade Runner motif. More importantly (if my memory holds out) large portions of the third world and less developed nations had been taken over, literally, by corporations.

So the Ivory Coast for example was no longer the Ivory Coast but instead it was owned by conglomerate XYZ and the citizens of that nation served as production slaves working in vast manufacturing complexes and lived at near starvation level in slums surrounding the plant. Think Soylent Green, and do remember its people.

So it really got me thinking about who is this 500 million? The answer I came up with is that all those agendas and plans are really targeted towards reducing the overall population of the west or developed countries to 500 million, and leaving the less developed nations alone to produce billions of worker drones who live in squalid conditions and work for pennies to produce the cultural artifacts for the well developed countries cheaply.

We can already see it in places like China where prison labor produces shoes for pennies on the dollar, which in turn are transported to shops here and sell for $60. Just think about the markup there. You have a shoe, produced by a prisoner which probably cost $1 to make and you are paying $60 for it. But that's the only strategy which makes sense because the reality is that most of that 6.9 billion population exists in less developed countries. They are under-educated and will work effectively for food and shelter.

Now that doesn't mean that the more developed countries are not targets, but it appears the de-population program is taking the long view and waiting for the population to naturally correct. If you think about it, that is the prudent strategy because it creates a silent war, there is no revolution or angry mobs just fewer people, which is the penultimate goal.

I know it sounds far fetched, but if you look at the numbers and the cold logic of it, there is a strategy there. As I said, look at the map and it will begin to become clear, and as nation states are compromised by the IMF in the third world it will become more obvious. But it is also the long view and that seems to be the option the powers that be take. Put the frog in the water and slowly heat it until you boil the frog.

This is also consistent with the Alternative Three scenario. As the cataclysm sets in, the West's population has been stabilized through Alternative Two and the eventual outcome of Alternative 2.5 which would be the creation of a surface fascist state to control the surface population. Even in that scenario the world still needs production of necessary items and consumables and those would need to be produced somewhere free of the ice.

Most of the western countries would see large portions of their land ice-locked, forcing the movement south. This will further compress the already largely underfed worker drone population, but these workers are left at barely subsistence level so their propagation would be tightly controlled.

In fact, you would probably see the implementation of a Soylent Green scenario where the dead are cannibalized to feed the living.

If, in the event of massive land mass loss, these areas could be easily exterminated due to their population density.

In the near term, the presence of the Third World would be needed to continue to serve as cheap labor as preparations are made and the Western First World population is stabilized. It is also important to note that in an Alternative Three scenario the Third World is used as a source for batch consignments, or slave labor on the offworld colonies.

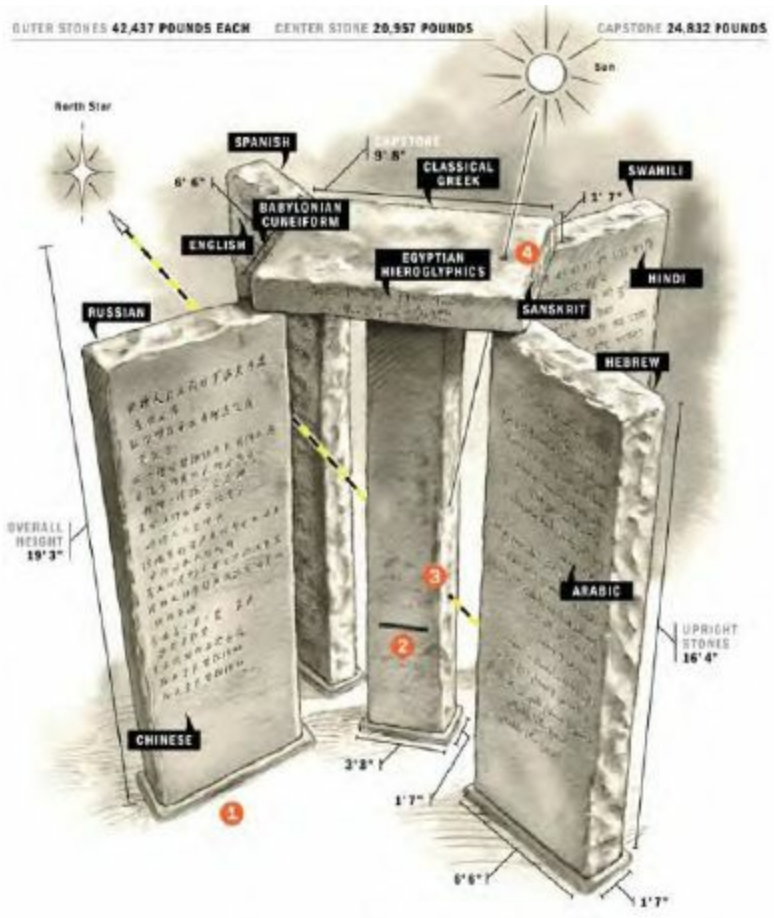

Figure 18 Copyright WIRED

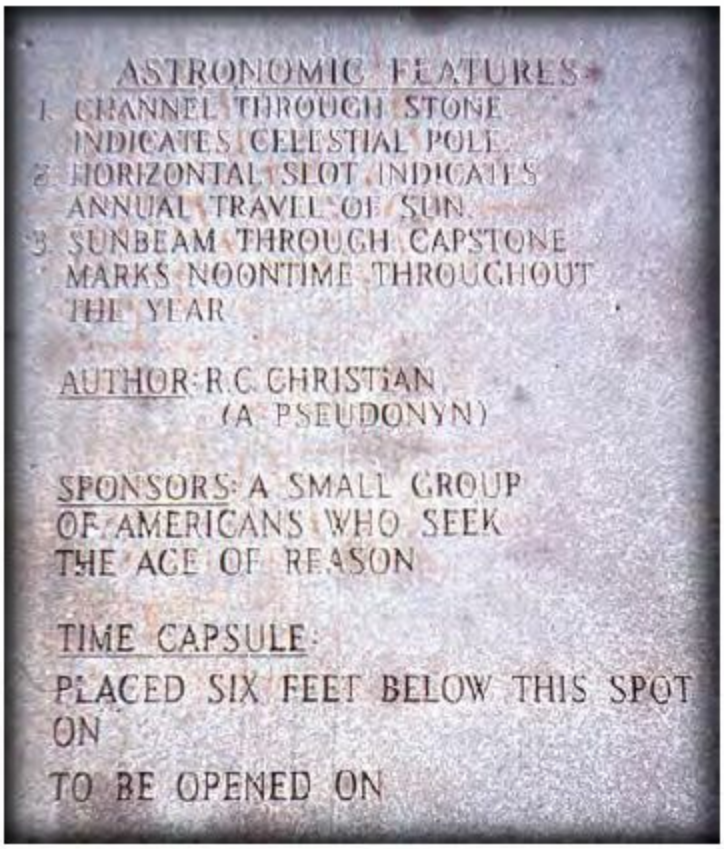

Figure 19 Key Tablet—This tablet provides some explanations. Notice the time capsule opening date has been left blank.

MAINTAIN HUMANITY UNDER 500,000,000
IN PERPETUAL BALANCE WITH NATURE
GUIDE REPRODUCTION WISELY -
IMPROVING FITNESS AND DIVERSITY
UNITE HUMANITY WITH A LIVING
NEW LANGUAGE
RULE PASSION - FAITH - TRADITION
AND ALL THINGS
WITH TEMPERED REASON
PROTECT PEOPLE AND NATIONS
WITH FAIR LAWS AND JUST COURTS
LET ALL NATIONS RULE INTERNALLY - RESOLVING EXTERNAL DISPUTES
IN A WORLD COURT
AVOID PETTY LAWS AND USELESS
OFFICIALS
BALANCE PERSONAL RIGHTS WITH SOCIAL DUTIES
PRIZE TRUTH - BEAUTY - LOVE - SEEKING HARMONY WITH THE INFINITE
BE NOT A CANCER ON THE EARTH
LEAVE ROOM FOR NATURE -
LEAVE ROOM FOR NATURE
Figure 20 The Guidstone Laws

Figure 21 The Unveiling of the Guidstones

8.

ALTERNATIVE 3—THIS AIN'T KANSAS ANYMORE, THIS IS THE MAIN EVENT

With the failure of Alternative One and Alternative Two new options had to be explored. This very quickly lead to the implementation of Alternative Three. Alternative Three was the most radical of the options presented and amounted to nothing less than the abandonment of the earth by a select few. The initial groups of high value persons would be ferried to bases on the Moon then ultimately on to Mars where a more permanent settlement could be constructed.

As the settlements on Mars and the bases on the Moon expand more people would be brought up until the time when it is no longer feasible to do so. Also mixed within the high value personnel would be what is referred to as "batch consignments" which represent a worker class ferried up to these bases to serve as laborers. This would give the leaders of the "Breakaway" civilization the required manpower needed to construct and maintain these bases.

On the surface of it the whole operation reads like science fiction until you step back and look, as we will in a later chapter, at the projects like "Horizon" and "Lunux" which were started by the United States Military in the late 1950s. According to those plans, full fledged bases should be online by the time the Apollo program had begun in earnest.

So what evidence is there that Alternative Three is underway?

The most compelling evidence, outside actual photographs of the installations themselves, is the testimony of Gary McKinnon.

McKinnon, a 40-year-old British hacker, broke into a number of highly protected military computer systems between February 2001 and March 2002. Amongst the many things he claims to have found, he says that he came across evidence of a secret space program including manifests of supplies and an Excel spreadsheet which referred to "Non-Terrestrial Officers" who were stationed on ships which could not be located on the Earth.

From the Wired Interview:

> I also got access to Excel spreadsheets. One was titled "Non-Terrestrial Officers." It contained names and ranks of U.S. Air Force personnel who are not registered anywhere else. It also contained information about ship-to-ship transfers, but I've never seen the names of these ships noted anywhere else.

This would be consistent which other testimony, which has seemed to indicate there is an active parallel space program underway.

Later in the interview McKinnon claims to have found evidence of NASA photo manipulation of photos on the moon.

> A NASA photographic expert said that there was a Building 8 at Johnson Space Center where they regularly airbrushed out images of UFOs from the high-resolution satellite imaging. I logged on to NASA and was able to access this department. They had huge, high-resolution images stored in their picture files. They had filtered and unfiltered, or processed and unprocessed, files.

> My dialup 56K connection was very slow trying to download one of these picture files. As this was happening, I had remote control of their desktop, and by adjusting it to 4-bit color and low screen resolution, I was able to briefly see one of these pictures. It was a silvery, cigar-shaped object with geodesic spheres on either side. There were no visible seams or riveting. There was no reference to the size of the object and the picture was taken presumably by a satellite looking down on it. The object didn't look manmade or anything like what we have created. Because I was using a Java application, I could only get a screenshot of the picture—it did not go into my temporary internet files. At my crowning moment, someone at NASA discovered what I was doing and I was disconnected.

What is interesting about this discovery McKinnon made is that, if, a base does exist on the Moon or Mars it would require the complicity of NASA in covering it up. This seems to show NASA is actively covering it up.

On one hand NASA, if there is indeed a secret space program, would need to make an outward attempt to survey and land on places like the Moon and Mars, but on the other hand they need to cover-up the pre-existing assets there. It is very much a catch-22 of sorts.

What's also interesting about the McKinnon case is the effort the United States put into trying to apprehend and extradite him. When the British High Tech Crimes Unit of Scotland Yard caught him in 2002, McKinnon was accused of the biggest military hack of all time. As such, the United States sought to extradite him and try him with a number of crimes which would have not only put him in prison for more then 70 years but also potentially placed him in Guantanamo Bay as a enemy combatant.

This seems excessive for a guy who hacked some computers and left some thinly veiled threats about revealing the truth about Roswell from 1947. Instead the US Government wanted to put this man away for the rest of his life. That alone in some ways could add credence to what he claims to have found.

McKinnon's discoveries are not the only thing, which is strange about our nearest celestial neighbor.

For more then 30 years NASA, as an agency, has tracked something in the Astronomy community known as "Transient Lunar Phenomenon" or "TLP." In fact the earliest case of TLP dates back to June 18, 1178 when monks from Canterbury reported the following:

"There was a bright new moon, and as usual in that phase its horns were tilted toward the east; and suddenly the upper horn split in two. From the midpoint of this division a flaming torch sprang up, spewing out, over a considerable distance, fire, hot coals, and sparks. Meanwhile the body of the moon which was below writhed, as it were, in anxiety, and, to put it in the words of those who reported it to me and saw it with their own eyes, the moon throbbed like a wounded snake. Afterwards it resumed its proper state. This phenomenon was repeated a dozen times or more, the flame assuming various twisting shapes at random and then returning to normal. Then after these transformations the moon from horn to horn, that is along its whole length, took on a blackish appearance."

The most recent recording puts the total number of sightings at around 2,200 since the 6th Century.

So what is TLP? Most commonly TLP is described as short lived lights moving across the surface of the Moon. In modern times many researchers such as John Lear have claimed to have found tracks associated with the TLP, almost like they are vehicles moving across the surface of the Moon with either lights or their skin reflecting the sunlight of the near side of the moon. This would make a lot of sense if mining operations were occurring there. Especially considering most of the sightings are seen in the Northern quadrants of the moon, a location were it has been theorized there are large deposits of Helium Three and Titanium. Helium Three is a fission power source and Titanium is a much needed metal for space travel.

Bases on the Moon and Mars, sounds astounding doesn't it, but perhaps the best evidence are the photos themselves. If we are indeed on the Moon and Mars there should be some tell tale evidence of occupation. As humans we do not tend to enter an environment cleanly, instead we tend to discard debris wherever we go. Additionally if there is such an installation or series of installations on these sites it would also make sense we should see the trails left by vehicles.

From McKinnon's testimony to Wired Magazine it seems clear that there is an active department trying to remove, with both airbrushes and computers, that very evidence we seek. It also appears they didn't get everything.

In the following pages you will be presented a series of photos which escaped the airbrush or the computer program. These images are originals or subsets of originals and if true show a very clear occupation of the Moon and Mars, being used as gateways to the larger solar system. In a later chapter we will also discuss the military plans for Lunar conquest from both the Soviet and American perspective.

Figure 22—SP-362 HRP76—MOON STRUCTURE

Figure 23 Lunik 13—MECHNICAL DEBRIS

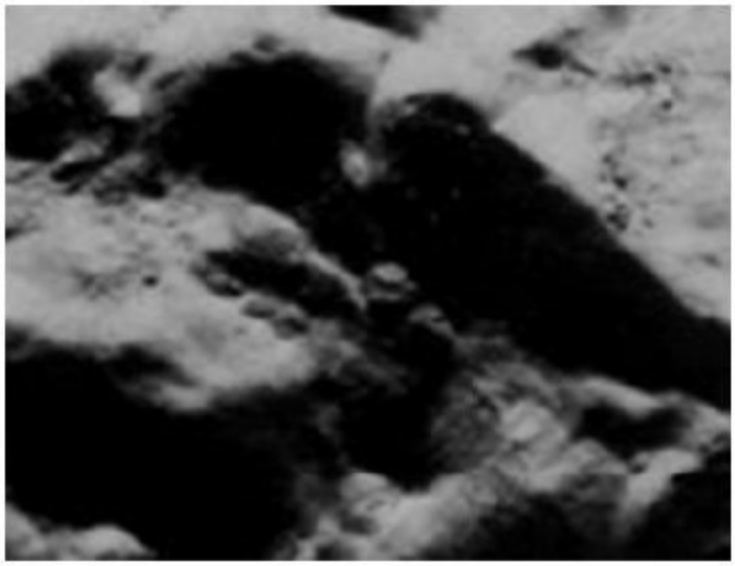

Figure 24 SP-362 HRP151—MOON BASE WITH DISH

Figure 25 AS11-41-6156HR—MOON BASE AT DISTANCE

Figure 26 AS16-116-18603HR —MECHANICAL DEBRIS

Figure 27 lo5_h168_2—MOON VEHICLE TRACKS

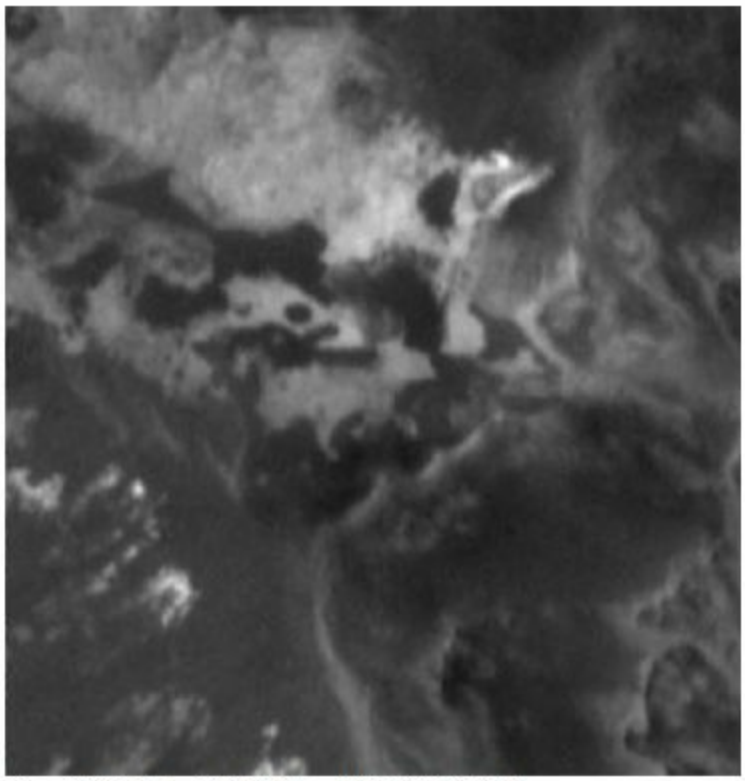

Figure 28 MOC orb_0084/08405e—MARS STRUCTURE

9.

THE NAZI FLYING SAUCERS

It's not often a topic of party conversation, but in recent years there has been a fair amount of evidence discovered regarding the supposed development of flying saucer type aircraft by the Third Reich late in the war. Writers such as Henry Stevens, Nick Cook, Joseph Farrell and of course the source for what we know about the Bell specifically Igor Witkowski have explored the topic and made significant traction in unearthing the truth behind the urban legends of Nazi UFOs.

It's important to note that in controversial subject such as Nazi UFOs, even the United States Air Force's best estimates were that at least some of the UFOs seen overhead in the past did originate in the Third Reich and you could by extension suggest that some of the UFOs seen today originate in the Fourth Reich, a breakaway civilization.

It was none other then Captain Edward Ruppelt, initial head of Project Blue Book, who has been quoted as saying:

> When WWII ended, the Germans had several radical types of aircraft and guided missiles under development. The majority were in the most preliminary stages, but they were the only known craft that could even approach the performance of objects reported by UFO observers.

This quote comes to us by way of David Hatcher Childress's book Lost Continents & the Hollow Earth and I think it illustrates the point that not only are Nazi UFOs possible but given much of the other evidence those saucers are most likely probable.

Der Glocke—Power Source of the Gods

Der Glocke, or The Bell, in many ways represents the linchpin in modern research into Nazi UFO technology. First discussed by Igor Witkowski in his book Prawda O Wunderwaffe (The Truth About The Wonder Weapon), Witkowski wrote his introduction to Die Glocke came by way of transcripts from the interrogation of a former SS Officer named Jakob Sporrenberg who had served as a SS-Grupenfurher leading the SS and police forces in Minsk.

Sporrenberg was later assigned to General Erich von dem Bach for anti-partisan operations ultimately ending the war in southern Norway again as head of the SS and police forces there.

Captured in Norway at the end of the war, he was interrogated at Kensington Palace Gardens in London and later extradited to Poland where he was tried and eventually executed on December 6, 1952 for his war crimes against Poland and the Soviet Union.

Witkowski claims he was shown the interrogation transcripts by an unnamed Polish intelligence officer in August 1997 due to information within them regarding German Wonder Weapons. According to Witkowski he was only able to transcribe the documents and was not allowed to make any copies, something which is not unheard of in such situations.

According to the transcripts there was apparently a large scale research and development facility called “Der Riese” or “The Giant” which was located near the then Czech border. At this facility, under the command of SS General Hans Kammler, primary research was carried out into exotic propulsion systems. That research eventually culminated in the Bell.

Die Glocke is often described as being constructed “out of a hard, heavy metal” and was nine feet wide and 12 to 15 feet high. The shape was similar to a large bell. The device contained two counter-rotating cylinders which would be “filled with a mercury substance, violet in color” whose code name was “Xerum 525.”

The fuel or Xerum 525 was often stored in a tall thin flask almost a meter high encased in a significant amount of lead. There have been stories that scientists and technicians who came into contact with Xerum 525 became violently ill and some died. As you can imagine the Bell was known to emit large amounts of radiation when activated, which apparently led to the death of several scientists as well as plant and animal test subjects. When tested, the Bell was tethered to “The Henge” as well as very large electrical cables.

Apparently successful, the Bell was later modified and used as the power source for a flying saucer shaped vehicle called “The Haunebu.”

What is very interesting about the Bell is that the device described by Watkowski is strikingly similar to a supposed UFO crash in Kecksburg, Pennsylvania. The Kecksburg UFO is commonly described as an acorn shaped object with strange hieroglyphics which may in fact have been Norse style runic placed on the Bell by its engineers to imbue it with occult-like power, not unheard of in the SS or Nazi realm.

Also very interesting was the discovery, by William Lyne, of a device called a KT-P2 which has also been called “The Celestial Navigator.” Lyne contends that the KT-P2 device was a Kreisel Teller Gyro Plate which ran on a 6-volt motor. The pilot would engage the device and set the desired heading, the slave compass would then show the heading of the device based on telemetry fed from a master compass tethered to it. The reason this becomes important is that this device and the master device were celestially calibrated and were not magnetic compasses. Most likely due to the wild magnetic fields a device like the Bell would generate.

So where did the Bell go?

There is some contention about he final resting place of the Bell technology. Cook argues that at the end of the war project lead Kammler negotiated with the United States government to protect himself and his top scientists by handing over the Bell. This has been supported, at least in part, by scattered comments about a Bell-like device being housed at the Foreign Technology Division of Wright Paterson AFB.

Others believe that Kammler killed many of the technicians and the prototypes, scientists and senior technicians into several Junkers 390 transports and took them to a secret base in Antarctica called "Base 211." While at Base 211 Kammler and his scientists supposedly completed the Bell prototype and operationized it.

What's interesting about the "Nazi Antarctic Survival Myth" as it is known is that the JU390 has a range of close to 6,000 miles which would have placed it somewhere in the range of Africa, well short of the required fuel load needed to fly directly to the Antarctic.

However, there has been some discussion mainly in Griehl's "Luftwaffe Ueber Amerika" that successful tests were carried out over the Atlantic where a JU290 was able to refuel a JU390 in flight. This would have given the JU390's the fuel required to make the flight to Antarctica.

There is also a story which comes to us via a document reportedly in the Argentine National Archives which reports a very large multi-engine German aircraft was being stored at a hanger near Gualeguay in the Entre Rios province of Argentina. The sighting was reported in May 1945 around the time of the German surrender.

That is in addition to the story there is also the persistent stories of U-Boats such as U-530 and U-977. In the case of U-530 that crew surrendered in Argentina in July 10, 1945 at Mar del Plata. After surrender the crew was transferred to the United States. U-977 surrendered August 17, 1945 again at Mar del Plata.

So what were those U-boats doing for months after the surrender? Is it possible that these U-boats were running supplies to Base 211 from allied nations such as Argentina?

It's possible, even probable. They were both in the right location at the right time to move material and personnel from Argentina to Base 211. That coupled with the large German transport sighted in May 1945 in Argentina tend to lend credence to that theory.

Given that the JU390 was indeed capable of a long duration flight and could be refueled via Spain or other friendly nations in flight it is indeed possible the JU390s controlled by Hans Kammler could have flown to Argentina or Antarctica where they were unloaded and the Haunebu / Bell project could be completed in secrecy.

Hans Kammler

A lot has been said about Hans Kammler, but who is Hans Kammler, really, and why was he the right man to lead the Bell project?

Hans Kammler was born in Stettin, Germany near what is now Szczecin, Poland. In 1919 Kammler served in the Rossbach Freikorps, known to be an extreme right wing unit which was known the be stringently anti-communist. In fact, Kammler's fellow Rossbach comrades included Rudolf Hoss who served as the commandant of Auschwitz and was hanged in Poland in 1947 for crimes against humanity.

1919 to 1923 Kammler studied Engineering at the Technische Hochschule der Freien Stadt in Danzig, later moving to Munich where he was awarded his Dr. Ing (Doctorate in Engineering) in 1932. Kammler joined the NSDAP in 1931 where he headed the Aviation Ministry's building department after the Nazi party came to power. He joined the SS in May 1933 and was issued number 113,619. By 1934 he was a councilor for the Interior Ministry, but Kammler wasn't done climbing the Nazi party ladder yet.

June 1941 Kammler joined the Waffen SS and was assigned to Oswald Pohl's WVHA or SS-Wirtschafts-Verwaltungshauptant group as Pohl's deputy. The WVHA oversaw AMT C and AMT D which oversaw the construction and administration of concentration camps. Kammler in particular oversaw the installation of the cremation facilities at Auschwitz.

As Kammler moved through the SS hierarchy he eventually came to the attention of Heinrich Himmler who personally assigned him to demolish the Warsaw ghetto after the Warsaw Ghetto Uprising in 1943. It should be stressed that to be assigned by Himmler for such a retaliatory action demonstrates his position in the greater SS organization.

Kammler's next big assignment was to take over the construction, supported by inmates from the nearby Buchenwald Concentration Camp, of the massive construction project at the Jonas Valley. The secret project, though never completed, has been tied to several code names including Siegfried, Jasmin, Olga, Burg and S/III thought its actual name is unknown.

Some theories around the Jonas Construction seem to link it to a chain of massive bunkers in central Thuringen near the city of Gotha, comprised a sort of Nazi Doomsday Bunker. It has been theorized that the Jonas site was selected due to its location to serve as a continuity of government facility in the event that the main Fuhrer Bunker fell and the Nazi central machine had to relocate from Berlin. In fact there is a claim that Hitler spent March 1945 in this or another adjacent bunker before moving on to locations unknown.

It has also been theorized the Jonas Valley site could also have been a launch and construction complex for the proposed "Amerika Rocket" which the Nazis were working on along with nuclear devices.

What is interesting about the Jonas installation is that, while this predates Alternative Three, the construction of a massive underground complex is consistent with an Alternative Two scenario. It is possible the Third Reich's own scientists had detected the changing environment and started a similar movement towards a breakaway style civilization.

What is known is that Kammler himself was heavily involved in secret weapons and exotic research as early as 1942 when Oswald Pohl sent a letter to Kammler to discuss constructing weapons at concentration camps which Pohl controlled.

As the war moved on, Kammler became increasing powerful and started to move towards exotic weaponry. First, in heading construction efforts for manufacturing facilities and launch platforms for the ME262 and V-2 rocket, and later in August 1943 Kammler assumed the command responsibility for Pennemunde.

During this time Albert Speer, Chief Architect of Nazi Germany, made Kammler his representative for "Special Construction Tasks." By March 1944 Kammler had pushed Goring to make him responsible for all special buildings.

So here we have a man, totally committed to the ideology of the Nazi movement who had steadily moved through the power structure of the SS. He was personally ordered by Himmler to destroy the Warsaw Ghetto, and was the builder of concentration camps.

Kammler represents the Nazi party elite and at its most foundation a man who would have been the man assigned to not only build Der Reise and supervise its research program but also a man who would have seen the end coming and prepared to perpetuate the 1000 year Reich.

Operation Highjump

If Kammler and others actually were successful in moving their base of operations to Base 211, then the presence of 211 certainly would have made the Allies nervous and according to many popular theories a massive US Naval operation was formulated to attempt to destroy Base 211.

In August 1946 world renowned polar explorer turned US Navy Rear Admiral Richard Bryd lead a massive naval operation in Antarctica which ostensibly was designed to field test US Military equipment in cold weather conditions. This was based on Bryd's assumption that the next war would involve an attack coming via the polar regions. That is an assumption which has some good philosophy behind it considering that the most direct path for Soviet forces would have been via the North Pole.

The operation, code named High Jump, involved some 4,700 men, 13 ships and numerous aircraft including modified PBY Catalina's which had been fitted and reconnaissance aircraft.

Task Force 68 was split into two groups, an eastern and a western command. The Western force landed on the Marquesas Islands in the December 1946. The Eastern force landed in on Peter I island a few weeks later and set up operations. The Western group immediately started running reconnaissance flights over the Pole, possibly in search of telltale evidence of German incursion into the area.

In January 1947 the ships massed in the Bay of Whales and built a beach head complete with runways. The base was dubbed Little America IV.

By February 1947 ships were recalled back to US ports apparently due to the oncoming harsh winter. What's strange about this turn of events is that the mission was designed to operate in those conditions, so why did they leave so quickly? Some in the conspiracy realm have hypothesized that those reconnaissance missions did indeed detect German activity and possibly contributed to the loss of a PBM Mariner, which killed four of the men. Faced with overwhelming force High Jump was called off and retreated while other options were considered.

Figure 29 Front PKT-p2

Figure 30 Side PKT-p2

Figure 31 Proudction Plate PKT-p2

Figure 32 JU390

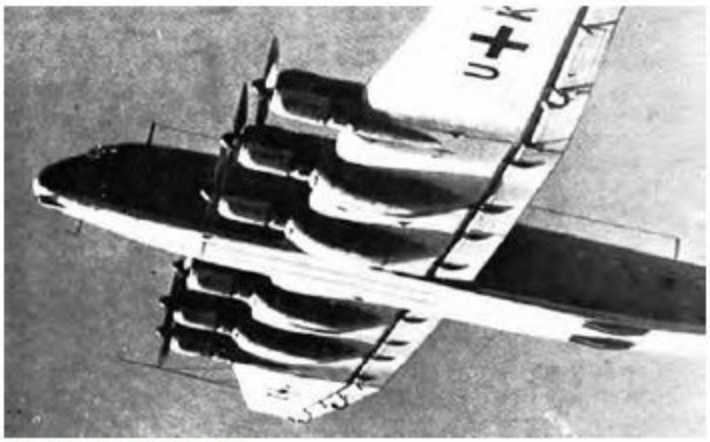

Figure 33 JU390 in Flight

Figure 34 JU290

Figure 35 JU290 Rear Ramp

FIG. 1:

FIG. 2:

FIG. 3:

FIG. 4:

FIG. 1: Top view showing fluorescent dial and face calibrations. The 12 30-degree directional increments comprise those observed by me in the night sky of West Texas in 1950-53, prior to my first close-up daylight sighting. The celestially calibrated master (gyro) compass, indicated true north prior to takeoff, and was continually referenced by the Peilsochterkompass, as directional changes selected on the dial were made. With its fantastic speeds, the early saucer still had the limitation of requiring some "dead reckoning", until the I.G.S. transponder implantations were put to use. This is probably the reason so many saucers strayed over area towns.

FIG. 2: Horizontal rear view shows label, and receptacle at bottom for control cable attachment, with 14 contacts, which include power for 6-volt D.C. motor, and 6 bi-directional polarities, interconnected to the "Meisterkompass". Selection of directional changes with the dial, automatically activated the appropriate high-voltage switches, via pairs of the twelve contacts. The electrical disturbances which made use of magnetic compasses impossible on the early saucers, necessitated development of this celestial guidance system in 1943. Necessity is the mother of invention! This system was adapted to the Peenemunde rockets, and is similar or identical to the 200 or so celestial guidance systems found by General George Patton, in the salt caves beneath the Peenemunde complex in 1945. Patton was infuriated when he was required to destroy them. This also proves possession of German-made celestial guidance systems---other than those destroyed by Patton---by our military, long before generally believed.

FIG. 3: Perspective view of the Peilsochterkompass.

FIG. 4: Photo of two antiquated wooden, high-voltage Tesla tuning coil forms (coils missing), purchased by me from the Los Alamos Scientific Laboratory ("LASL") salvage, around 1978. Twelve 30-degree increments on the notched form are primitively secured by an old window latch. They were part of some stuff cleared out of an "old barn" in the oldest area of the Lab. Examination of the patina, materials, screws, nuts, bolts, and other hardware, indicates a ca. 1900 construction date, long before the 1942 Manhatten Project. The forms were apparently reworked in the 1950s to add modern automotive thrust bearings. Handwriting on them comports with that of Nikola Tesla. They were probably among electrical apparati acquired by the Illuminati from Tesla's Colorado Springs workshops, via sheriff's sales, taken eventually south to Los Alamos for use in Von Braun's Illuminati "p2" project. Lab security personnal were probably unaware of their origin or use by the time they were released for sale in 1978.

Figure 36 Actual PKT-p2 Compass—Source Unknown

Figure 37 Hans Kammler

Figure 38 Hans Kammler in his SS Uniform

Figure 39 U-977

Figure 40 U-530 in Argentina

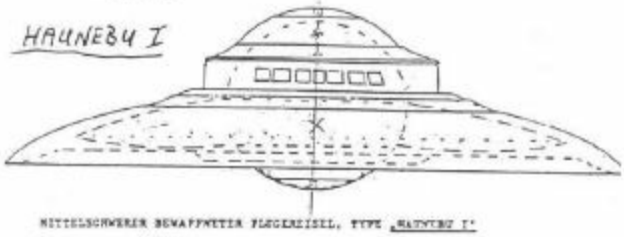
Geheime Kommandosache

Flugkreisel-Erprobung, Stand / Anzahl Erprobungsflüge:

HAUNEBU I	(vorhanden 2 Stück)	52	E-IV
HAUNEBU II	(vorhanden 7 Stück)	106	E-IV
HAUNEBU III	(vorhanden 1 Stück)	19	E-IV
(VRIL 1)	(vorhanden 17 Stück)	84	(Schwarm)

Empfehlung:
Beschleunigen von Abschlußerprobung und Produktion „Haunebu II" + „VRIL I"

HAUNEBU I



MITTELSCHWERES BEWAFFNETES FLUGKREISEL, TYPE „HAUNEBU I"

Durchmesser: 25 Meter
Antrieb: Thule-Tachyonator Th
Steuerung: Mag-Feld-Impulsor 4
Geschwindigkeit: 4800 Kilom.p.Std. (versuchsweise bis 17000)
Reichweite in Flugzeit: 18 Stunden
Bewaffnung: 2 x 88mm KSK in Drehtürmen und 4 x MK 108, starr nach vorn
Außenpanzerung: Doppel-Vibalex
Besatzung: 8 Mann
Wendigkeit: 60 %
Steigbeschleunigkeit: 8 Minuten
Allgemeine Flugfähigkeit: Tag wie Nacht
Grundsätzliche Einsatztauglichkeit: 40 %
Frontverfügbarkeit: Nicht vor Jahresende 44

Bemerkung: Die SS-E-IV hält Konzentrationslauf bereits im Versuch stehende „Haunebu II" für sinnvoller als an beiden Typen parallel weiterzuarbeiten. „Haunebu II" verspricht entscheidende Verbesserungen in nahezu allen Punkten. Höhere Herstellungskosten nehmen gerechtfertigt - besonders mit Blick auf Führer-Sonderbefehl, Flugkreisel betreffend.

Figure 41 Alleged Haunebu Document

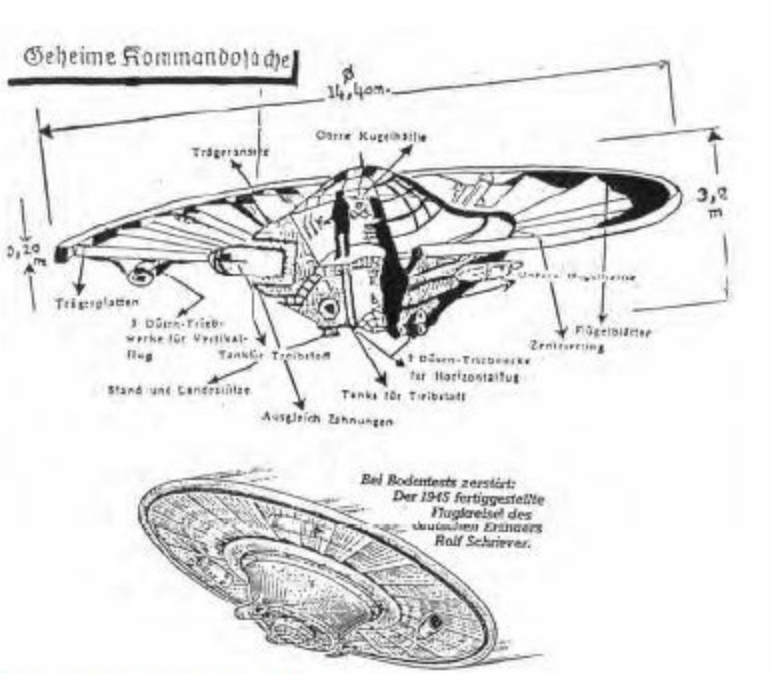


Figure 42 Alleged VRIL Document

10.

CLOSE ENCOUNTERS OF THE TOTALLY GERMANIC KIND—WHO ARE THESE GUYS, REALLY?

So following the previous line of thinking, and assuming the Nazis did indeed build spaceships like the Haunabu or the Vril, one would expect them to be actively doing things. Why invest the effort to construct such devices if not to use them, right?

The short answer would be yes, and the evidence is hidden within the 1950s-era contactee movement as well as the seminal Betty and Barney Hill abduction.

In much of the contactee writings of the 1950s as well as later work involving contactee style visitations, there is a predilection for "Venusians" and "Nordics" as a source for the visitations.

There is almost an obsession with these two groups and it would make some level of sense given that Venus is close by and Nordics, at least on the surface of it, represent a human type being which is easily relatable to the human mind.

So I know what Venus is but what on earth is a "Nordic?" Wikipedia, the source of all truth (?), describes Nordics in this way:

> Nordic aliens are said by self-described contactees and some UFOlogists to be a group of humanoid extraterrestrials who resemble European racial images, or more specifically Nordic-Scandinavians.

> Nordics are typically described as six to seven feet tall with long blond hair and blue eyes, and are commonly reported as being male. Their skin is said to range from fair colored to tanned, they are reported to be in excellent physical shape, and they are sometimes described as wearing skintight clothing. During the 1950s, many contactees, especially those in Europe, reported beings fitting this description. Such claims became relatively less common in subsequent decades, as the grey alien supplanted the Nordic in most accounts of extraterrestrial encounters, but Nordic aliens are still occasionally reported. Some sources, such as UFO Contact Center International, refer to Nordic-type aliens as Pleiadians, referring to the Pleiades star cluster.

So effectively Nordics are conceived of as the blond haired and blue eyed aliens from Venus or the Pleiades. A description some psychologists have seen as a way of articulating our inherent racially biased fears manifest through alien visitation: A notion which does hold weight given the racial stereotyping we see every day.

But what if, just for the sake of argument, the contactees really did meet Nordic looking individuals who claimed not to be aliens but simply from somewhere else, like Venus, and the came across the vastness of space in a flying saucer. Who else could they be? A very good question.

There is a small element of the Betty and Barney Hill case which is often glossed over, which may give us some gateway to the true identity of these “Nordic” aliens. During hypnotic regression, Barney Hill made the observation that the aliens looked like Nazis and moved with a Nazi-like precision. He also claimed they were dressed in shiny black uniforms with silver piping and peaked caps: A description which is very reminiscent of the uniform of the SS, especially if you look at the operational uniforms of specific units such as the Panzer crews. Barney Hill had also reported, during that initial regression, that he heard them speak something which sounded very much like German.

Walter Webb, the NICAP investigator who took down the sighting, reported the following in his October 1961 report:

"The figures, according to Barney Hill were of human form dressed in shiny black uniforms and black caps with peaks or bills on them (which could be seen when the figures turned their heads). The uniforms were like glossy leather…The figures reminded the observer of the cold precision of German officers; they moved smoothly and efficiently and showed no emotion except for one figure operating a lever who, Mr. Hill claimed, looked over his shoulder and smiled…The 'leader' at the window held a special attraction for the witness and frightened him terribly."

So is it possible a UFO staffed by a German crew picked up the Hills? It would appear to be very plausible, but that isn't the half of it.

During the early regressions Barney also pointed out the presence of a red headed Irishman, not very alien, but this also points out another element to this story which is generally lost to time.

It is not widely known but in the early part of World War II Ireland, apparently where this gentleman hailed from, was neutral but the country did have a large population of very much pro-Nazi or at a minimum Nazi sympathizers in its government as well as active in the IRA. In fact many of the senior members of the IRA including Sean Russell who went to Berlin to specifically be trained by the Germans in the use of German military equipment.

In fact during World War II, there were a small number of Irish volunteers who fought in the SS. The number was small but they were active both as combatants as well as spies operating as part of the Abwher.

It is also not widely reported that during the Spanish Civil War the IRA sent two units to aid the fascists. Both the Irish Brigade and Irish Contingent of the International Brigades fought on the fascist side of that bloody conflict. So it is not necessarily surprising that there would be individuals who were ethnically Irish on board a Nazi spaceship especially if they were high ranking sympathizers.

It should also be pointed out that this element of the Hill abduction is also not widely reported, and seems to be lost to the mists of time.

Another interesting element of that much of what we know about the source of the vessel comes from a map which Betty Hill had seen and memorized. Later drawings the map, which was investigated by Marjorie Fish, seems to indicate their home as being Zeta Reticuli.

The main issue we find here is that if the map was indeed seen, and properly drawn it was matched against earth relative view point which would make the map somewhat suspect. It is interesting there was a star map, but I'm not sure that it truly indicates the source of the ship, and frankly could mean anything.

Imagine it like this, you are an alien who has spent quite some time to come to the Earth because it's not a quick trip.

Your star maps would be relative to the source not the destination. If you were to draw a map even in the reverse its orientation would be clouded by the source since your understanding of navigation would be relative to your home. So the fact that the star map is relative to Earth either means that the occupants were SOL (our sun) centric or the map is a red hearing devised to confuse two individuals who were scared and confused. Meaning this could have potentially been done to fill the narrative for the abductees and help them frame their experience.

This is also not the only report of saucer occupants speaking German. Legendary contactee George Adamski had reported several times overhearing the Venusians speaking German and later Everett Clarke reported German speaking aliens landing in the field behind his house.

It was around this same time Reinhold Schmidt, another contactee, also reporting a landing in Nebraska and actually conversed with the "Nordic" crew in German.

Probably the most famous, or infamous depending on your point of view, case of Nordic interaction was with Billy Meir and his interactions with "Semjase:" A name some researchers have pointed to being listed as a fallen angel in the book of Enoch. Thus making it of terrestrial origin, at least initially.

Each time the crew was dressed in a similar fashion to known uniforms of the Nazi era, and each time the crews spoke fluent German. Is that a coincidence? Well there is another part of this story, which requires discussion and that is of course the UFOs themselves, but we just covered that. Let's just say the design of the UFOs seen during this era and frankly subsequent eras is indeed consistent with the original Nazi designs.

However, the story does not end there.

We would be truly remiss if not to mention the story of a man named Valiant Thor.

According to this story in March 1957 in Alexandria, Virginia one of the highest ranking Venusian leaders came to meet then President Dwight D. Eisenhower to discuss something of critical importance, at least that was the impression of contactee Howard Menger.

So the story goes Valiant Thor, Donn, Jill and Tanyia had come to Earth from Venus to deliver a special message and an offer to help the Earth. An offer to which Eisenhower apparently responded that the people of Earth were not yet ready for the disclosure of aliens and their public presence would plunge the Earth into an "abyss of chaos."

Eisenhower did however invite Thor to stick around and help out for a while, while he spoke with other leaders to come up with a sort of game plan. To this, Eisenhower was given three years to sort it out. In the meantime, Thor and his crew would assist scientists and they apparently did so. It's also important to remember that these meetings and interactions took place during the 1950s and does pre-date the modern space program.

The story goes on from there, but the main points of interest here are the names and several photos taken of the crew including Thor.

The first thing we should do in discussing Valiant Thor is to take a look at he and his companions' names. One would imagine that coming from a foreign land their names would be decided alien in nature, possibly unpronounceable by the human mouth. Instead of some decidedly exotic name there is Valiant Thor which represents Brave God of Thunder. His name an obvious reference to Norse/Nordic mythology, as well as Donn, Jill, and Tanyia all of which are either common enough names or slightly modified from the normal spelling.

What strikes me as odd is that the leader's name is an obvious Norse reference and something I could see space Nazis naming their children. The others? Fairly common.

Now one could imagine Venusians picking earthly names as to not confuse us little ape decedents, it is not unheard of even today when people from another country pick anglicized names to ease integration into their new homes. But why choose a Nordic derived name? That is very odd and I think very telling.

The UFOs

The term "Flying saucer" is actually a misnomer. It is largely attributed to Kenneth Arnold who saw a large formation of odd aircraft flying near him in the Cascades and described them as traveling as though they were saucers skipping across a pond.

What Arnold actually reported was seeing a large formation of arc shaped craft specifically reminiscent but updated version of the Horten HO 229.

Later interactions with Nordics involved the use of more true flying saucers of a classic variety. What is interesting is that if you compare these saucers to the known German designs of the World War II era they seem to be a pretty close match, even down to the anti gravity pods on the lower portion of the ships.

What's more interesting is that if you look at the basic contactee era UFO, the German style UFO then compare that to the UFO that Robert Lazar reported in 1989 what you see is evolution and modification which makes me believe the "sportster" style UFO, which Lazar reported seeing, is an evolutionary step and with modifications to improve upon a older, maybe captured, design. The anti-gravity amplifiers are still there but hidden inside the under structure of the UFO versus a 1950s era UFO or a World War II era design where the pods could be seen.

The other interesting element is that when Lazar boarded the ship he said he could see a strange kind of writing scrolling across a screen on the front of the room. The script he saw looks alien in artists' renditions but could have been some sort of bastardized Runic alphabet written in a kind of cursive. That is a bit of a stretch but still possible nonetheless.

The thing about Lazar is that despite being bombarded with accusations of being a hoaxer, more then 20 years later he still tells the same story. He has also, on several occasions, produced a W2 tax form and other minutia which seemed to indicate he was present at the site. So in my estimation he absolutely believes what he is saying, but that's not to say he is absolutely accurate in his appraisal.

It's my contention that much of what Lazar has told us was told to him in a series of briefings and in briefing documents but, I believe at least, that the information was not completely accurate. This would make sense, and is a classic disinformation ploy which assumed he would tell other people what he had been told and thus spread an incorrect story which could not only muddy the waters but could also be used to discredit him if he went public, which it was attempted to do.

This is a tactic the military and CIA have used before. In fact, during the early A-12 program and later SR-71 program the CIA and military used UFO reports to cover up covert flights. I think the same is probably still being done to cover up Aurora flights as well as the numerous government derived flying saucers and space planes which appear to do the sky per my articles on Solar Warden and the secret space program.

UFOs make a convenient cover for covert operations. They always have and frankly still do. Then again these aircraft, when sighted, are unidentified flying and there are certainly objects.

So are the Nordics Nazi supermen and women from the planet Venus or do I deserve a tin foil hat? I think a strong argument could be made either way but if we apply Occam's Razor to this problem, and the simplest answer is usually the right one would seem to indicate Nazis from Venus is more likely then Nordics from the Pleiades. The tin foil hat? Only time will tell.

We know that the Nazis were working on the creation of Aryan super soldiers and have a quite sophisticated selection program. We know they founded the Lebensborn birth centers to execute this strategy, and if there are space Nazis it stands to reason that almost 70 years later they might have achieved their goals. So if they came here, those crews would probably be some of the best they had, and as a result would demonstrate their success with the Lebensborn.

If we look at Nordic interaction, the uniforms, their physical make up, and the fact they have been overheard speaking German I think one could make a good argument that the Nordics are Space Nazis.

I know how that sounds, but it makes a lot of sense. They come here to manipulate, like Valiant Thor, or they come here to monitor, like Adamski or Leslie, but both of those operations would be something you would do.

I always liken it to a television show of my youth. It was called "Wild Kingdom" and each week Marlin Perkins would show us some fascinating wild animals. The show usually involved a helicopter and tranquilizer darts, then there was the tagging which allowed the scientists to track the movements of the elk or buffalo, or whatever.

Substitute a flying saucer for a helicopter, and an implant for the tag. What do you have? Something coming here, abducting people, doing some experiments, and tagging them for tracking and that is something you would want to do either as an alien or as a group of former earth people who left the planet and want to come back.

Do I know that Nordics are Space Nazis? Not concretely, but it does make a lot of sense. So the next time you meet up with a Nordic, if you talk to them regularly, you might want to enquire as to their planet of origin as well as the history of their society because I think the answer you get may shock you.

Figure 43 Betty and Barney Hill

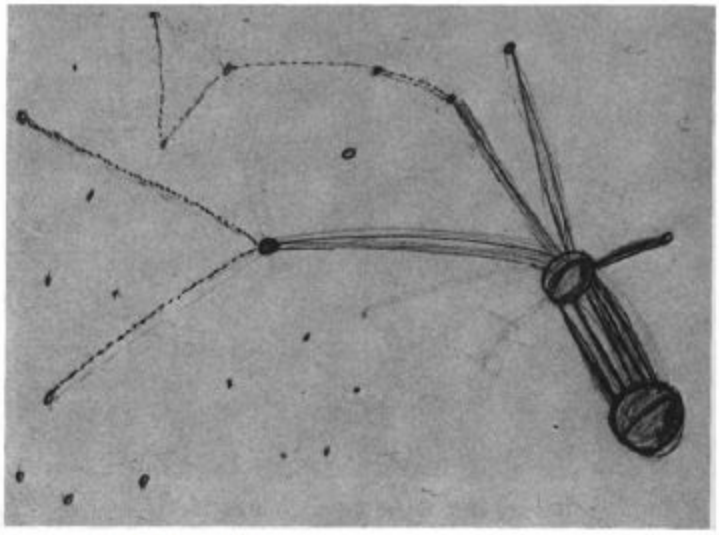

Figure 44 The Hill STARMAP

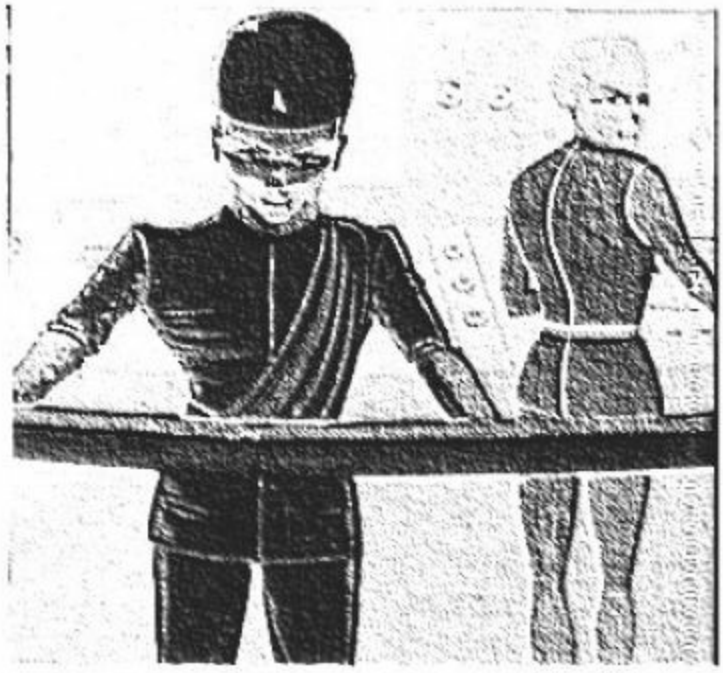

Figure 45 ARTIST RENDERING OF HILL ALIENS

Figure 46 Commander Valient Thor

Figure 47 JILL, VALIENT THOR AND DONN

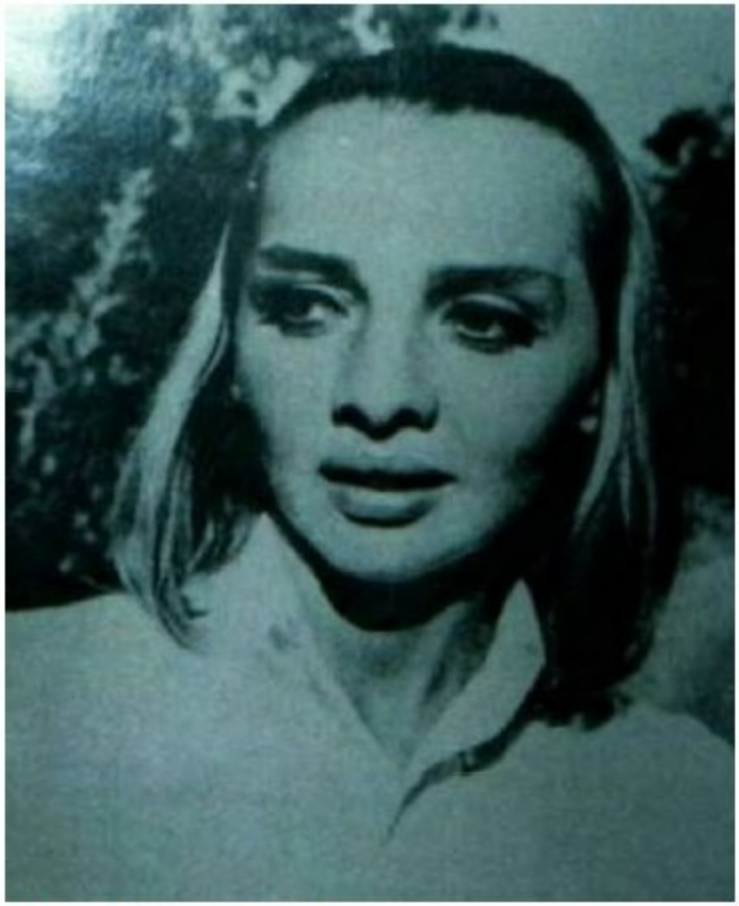

Figure 48 NORDIC ALIEN WOMAN

Figure 49 HORTON HO 229

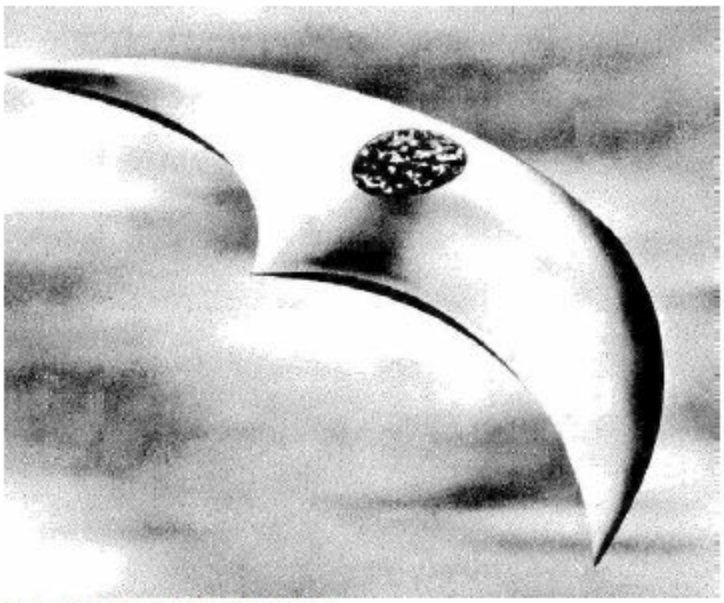

Figure 50 KENNETH ARNOLD UFO

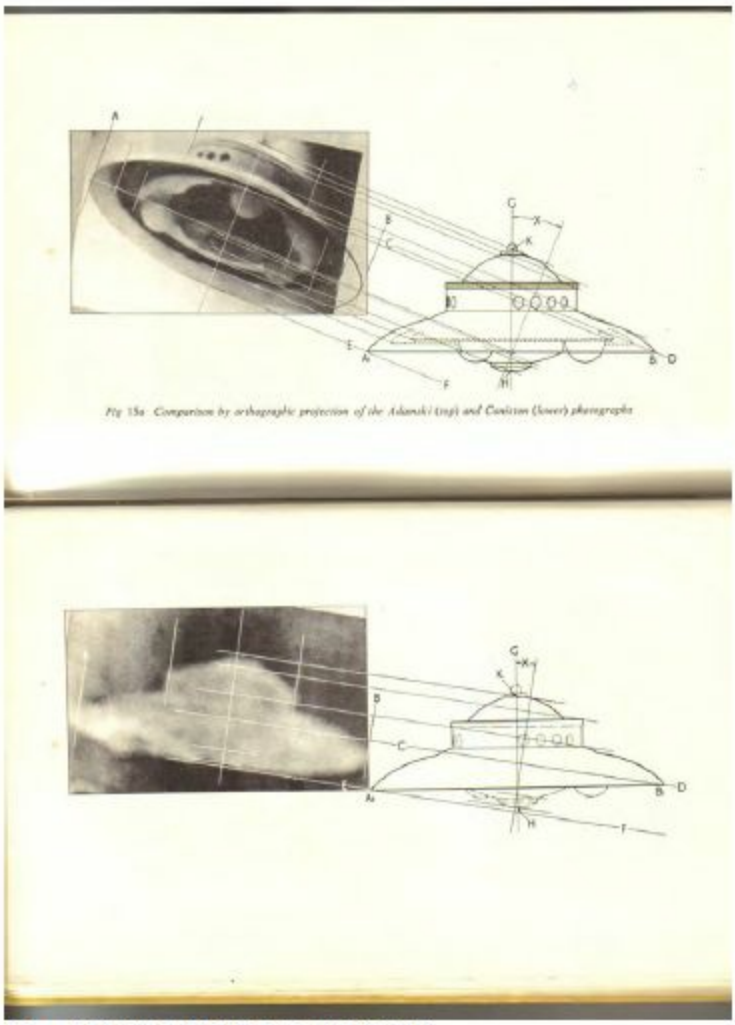

Fig 15a Comparison by orthographic projection of the Adamski (top) and Coulson (lower) photographs

Figure 51 ADAMSKI VENUSIAN SCOUT SHIP

11.

UFO ICONOGRAPHY—UH IT'S NOT ALIEN, THAT'S FOR SURE…

One of the key linchpins in this idea of human built UFOs is to take a look at the markings. Humans are a curious lot, and we like to label things as well and organize things. It's in our very nature. So it would stand to reason that if a UFO was of human construction it would indeed be labeled and categorized.

This is a very tricky line of research and it is fraught with peril because within the UFO community there is a strong, almost urgent, need to believe in this idea that the UFO experience is alien. I think in some cases this is due in part to the need to believe we are not alone, and as a firm supporter of not only J. Allen Hynek but also the pioneering mathematical research by Frank Drake, I believe we are not alone. I also share Hynek's opinion that at least 10 percent to 20 percent of all UFO sightings may indeed be alien in origin but I believe that the vast majority are ships made by humans.

So how do you prove that these ships are human? Over my last few chapters I have attempted to lay out a compelling argument of who built these ships, which include the usual suspects of NATO, the Soviet Union and various fascist elements who decided to leave in the post World War II timescale.

As discussed in the previous chapter, I have documented fairly good evidence that some abductions such as Betty and Barney Hill were actually carried out by, for lack of a better term, Space Nazis as well as elements of our own military under a Millab scenario. But it was an article written by the famous Otto Binder in a 1972 Saga magazine which has now given me the strongest evidence of all that these ships are human and if we can slot that fact into the secret space program we have a fairly complete story.

So what is so shocking about what Binder wrote in 1972? In that article, which UFO Iconoclast has reproduced, Binder undertook an analysis of UFO iconography, you might say logos, and what he documented is staggering in its implications. But we need to make some assumptions, and as a reader I ask you to indulge me.

The first assumption is that an alien intelligence would think, feel and write in an alien way. Much the same way that someone from Japan would write in Japanese and have a different view of the world as someone in, say, the United States.

As an English speaker I could learn Japanese and maybe recognize it but if I were in Japan I would expect signs to be in Japanese. In the same way if an alien were to place marking on their spaceship they would use alien writing not English or any other earthbound language.

The second assumption is that as humans we label things. We name our aircraft (For example the famous Air Colbert plane which Virgin America named after Stephen Colbert), we name our cities, streets and just about anything. We do this for a lot of reasons but those markings are significant and in a military or governmental sense are required to designate things like squadrons, purposes, and home bases.

The final assumption I would suggest we make is that as humans we will report what we see as accurately as we can but as non-trained observers that those observations might be slightly off.

Madrid UFO / Italian Fascist Aircraft Symbol

The first symbol that I found interesting in the article was a symbol seen on a UFO in 1967 over Madrid, Spain. While the match between the UFO image and the World War 2 Italian symbol, is not exact. It is directionally similar and given the time scale of 22 years post World War II, could represent a change in stylization. The other point to consider is if this was seen at an angle. The angle of observation could also change the image, as we will see below.

Simi Valley / Luftwaffe Symbols

In 1967 Gary Chopic observed the symbol below on the side of a triangular UFO flying over his house in Simi Valley, California which bears a striking resemblance to the symbol used by the World War 2 era Luftwaffe to designate the rank of the pilot or their standing within the squadron.

Gary Chopic observed this design on the side of a triangular-shaped UFO in California's Simi Valley in October of 1973.
BF 109 F4 Stab I./JG 4
triple Chevron- Hptm. Franz Hahn
Mizil - Romania
October 1942

San Bernardino / NSB Symbol

The next image we can take a look at was seen over the San Bernardino Mountains in 1954 by A.P. Wheeler. The interesting element here is the “F” shaped symbol, which bears a striking resemblance to the Wolfsangel symbol used by the NSB—National Socialist Movement of the Netherlands during World War II. If the observation is accurate, the “F” shape on the left seen by Wheeler could very well represent the stylized Wolfsangel as used by the NSB. The other markings could have a number of meanings in this context but the fairly clear symbol is the Wolfsangel. So why would a symbol used by a fascist organization from the 1940s be seen on a UFO over San Bernardino in 1954? This would indicate the potential presence of a NSB contingent utilizing German saucer technology.

In the San Bernardino Mountains one misty evening in February, 1954, A.P. Wheeler, a mechanical engineer, observed these markings on the hatch of a landed UFO (top). Eighteen months later, in Arizona, he saw another UFO with similar insignia.

Belgium / British Union of Fascists

Little is known about the 1973 symbol seen below other then it was seen in Belgium by a 28 year old individual of a UFO seen hovering over his garden. The UFO was seen for over four minutes and he took extremely good notes on the symbol seen. What is interesting about this icon is two fold. Number one, the image bears a striking resemblance to the symbol used by the British Union of Fascists (the flash of action embedded in the circle of unity) as well as the symbol used by the People's Action Party of Singapore. The second interesting fact is that as the crow flies Belgium, long a hot spot for UFO sightings, is fairly close to England.

So if a ship being used by members of the English fascist contingent was being used in the air over Europe it is not beyond the pale to think that it might fly over Belgium for some reason. The other question to ask is again, why would a non-human intelligence use symbols on their ships which are easily identifiable (this symbol is also similar to the symbol used by The Flash in comics). One would image an alien would use iconography based on their own experience from their own world, not ours.

A 28-year old Belgian observed a UFO for almost four minutes as it hovered over his garden wall in December of 1973. He took careful note of the emblem on its body.

Flash symbol seen on a UFO in Belgium, 1973.

HU HR PS RED
Three boys who observed an object a short distance offshore at Cape Canaveral in June of 1966 agreed that it carried these markings.

Cape Canaveral / Soviets

One of the more interesting images found by Binder is a symbol reported by three boys over Cape Canaveral in 1966. The interesting element here is why would an alien UFO have a recognizable Soviet red star with the English letters HU HR PS RED? One important thing to remember is that even in 1966 the official flight language, meaning the international language used by pilots, was English and many aircraft had at least some marking in English as a result.

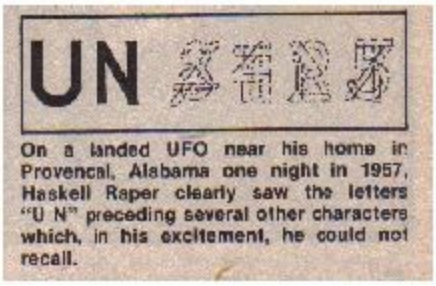
This would lend credence to the idea of a breakaway civilization operating in our skies as early as 1966. This is also consistent with the notion that the Alternative Three scenario began after the American Chemical Society meeting of 1957 which is referenced in the film.

Oklahoma City / Temple Texas

Another very interesting set of symbols came out of Oklahoma City and Temple, Texas in 1971 and 1965. These images reported by two different observers seem to show again English lettering on the side of a UFO with roman style numeric symbols attached. The true meaning of these designations is only a guess but this also seems to indicate Breakaway aircraft operating in the skies over the south and Midwestern United States in the 1960s and 1970s. The question we must ask here is why would an alien ship from another star use English letters and numbers as part of a designation or tagging of a vehicle?

You would think that being of an alien source this symbols, seen on a UFO, would be alien in origin, not English, which is easily read by any English speaker, unless they are American in origin and part of a larger fleet of ships active outside our atmosphere a la Solar Warden and the finds by Gary McKinnon. It would again demonstrate why the United States government targeted McKinnon and why so much effort was put forward to marginalize him and his information.

Provencal, AL / The United Nations



UN
On a landed UFO near his home in Provencal, Alabama one night in 1957, Haskell Raper clearly saw the letters "U N" preceding several other characters which, in his excitement, he could not recall.

The final image I would like to reference from the Saga article is the image we see to the left. In my mind this image, amongst all the others, has the strongest implications for the Breakaway Civilization argument. This image reported by Haskell Raper from a UFO seen over the skies of Alabama in 1957 shows a UN along with four numbers. This is particularly interesting because each of the images we've seen with a two-digit code (TL, IX and UN) are followed by four numbers.

This would clearly demonstrate a numbering scheme. Its also interesting because that number scheme has appeared to have lasted more then 30 years ranging from this 1957 report to the 1971 report above from Texas.

What is also interesting is that the designation appears to be United Nations in origin. This would again lend itself to the idea of: An international space fleet and an international attempt to evacuate the earth which we know from the Alternative Three premise. One would stand to reason that an international body such as the UN would play a key role in the Alternative Three scenario being that they are an extra-governmental body which would be crucial in the project and program management of such an undertaking. The United States, former Soviet Union (now Russian Federation) are both permanent members of the security council and founders of the United Nations.

What we have seen in the examples above is a clear indication that with UFOs there is more then meets the eye. It is reasonable to think that if the Germans chose to move their Fourth Reich to the stars they would probably bring along a few other fascists who shared their beliefs. We saw this with the Irishman in the Betty and Barney Hill abduction as well as the Nordic Space Brothers from Venus. If there is a extra-earthly contingent of space fascists we can now see clear evidence that their is at least minimally a group from the UK, Ireland, the Netherlands, and Italy operating along with the German groups.

This also supports the space war notion where there is a struggle for control of space between the Earthbound Breakaway group and the fascists kicked into space in a post World War II escape. We've seen the evidence, which this makes stronger, and we've seen the war in STS48, Ed Grimsley's space war footage and now we can at least identify some of the groups involved. It is not an accident that these symbols bear a striking resemblance to the World War II era groups they represented. If their ideology has not changed why would their symbols? And symbols mean something.

Additionally these images have shown us that from an Alternative Three point of view, we are able to identify at least several craft, which are marked, operating in the skies over the Earth, including the United Nations.

To move large amounts of people off planet to the Moon or Mars, or where ever, takes a large concerted effort on the part of many groups. So it would stand to reason that the UN would be involved and other countries would have their own ships to move people and supplies to their constituent bases.

What these markings are not is alien. That would make no rational sense here since the markings are in English, and English is the international flight language.

We can argue about do aliens exist or is this all a sham but what is clear now is that at least some percentage of these strange ships over our skies are human, and it is clear to me now that the Breakaways have been at this for a very long time.

12.

LASERS, UFOS, AND SDI – EVIDENCE OF THE WAR IN SPACE, SPACE WARDEN AND THE HIDDEN MILITARY MACHINE IN ORBIT

It all started simply enough, as these things usually do. I was a guest on Ground Zero Radio, hosted by the venerable Clyde Lewis, talking about the Secret Space Program, Solar Warden and the like when in the fourth hour we had a very interesting call.

A gentleman called into the show from Washington state and wanted to discuss a secret program he had worked on back in the 1970s. Being that he called in from Washington state I have some suspicions about his employer.

So he called in and began to describe a project he had worked on called "Space Warden" which was part of the SDI program, but wait, the SDI program was launched under president Ronald Regan in the early 1980s right? Well here I have a man on the phone saying he was working on a functional program in 1974!

Well the discussion got even better.

He reported to us that the program he had worked on, Space Warden, was well underway in 1974 and was field deployed around the time Regan announced SDI.

Ok very interesting, but he continued. The facility he worked at in Southern California, probably "Plant 42," was guarded by United States Marshalls, not the usual Wackenhut guards, but instead U.S. Marshalls.

At which point he went into some detail about the program and stated that to his knowledge there were three components, two killer satellites with lasers in a equatorial orbit and a third hunter killer which was a rover and moved around and that got me to thinking.

When you get a call like that you really have to pause for a minute and think about things.

Any conspiracy researcher worth his weight in anything has a vast storehouse of sometimes-meaningless information that they have to access from the recesses of their brains to make a connection and for me a connection was forming.

It's kind of like an old TV show I used to watch called "Connections" hosted by James Burke.

I vividly remember in one episode that Burke was in an estate garden holding a briefcase. As was so common with him he nonchalantly asked the implied viewer something to the effect of "I bet you're wondering what's in the briefcase, well it has enough power to light a small city for a year."

Then he went on to say "But it doesn't do that because it's a nuclear bomb, boom.." then he tossed it in the air.

Connections was a great show because James Burke was the master at connecting seemingly unconnected things, and this skill is one the proper conspiracy research must have as well, but I digress, and back to the story.

So I remembered back to my youth, about a graphic I had seen when Regan introduced the SDI program as well as a conversation I had once had with a Russian man who had worked in the Soviet space program about SDI. Both of which supported the caller.

The idea was simple: you have a particle beam or laser satellite or "killer" and you have a "Spaced-Based Interceptor" or a "Hunter Killer." The Killers had orders programmed into it from the ground station to hit a missile, or object in space, where the Hunter/Killer is independent, and I would suggest, autonomous.

All very interesting stuff to think about, but 1974? Much more interesting! Rumors have been going around for decades now that programs like "Space Warden" had not been cancelled as we were lead to believe but instead keep right on trucking and were actually deployed, only now it looks like SDI was running by the time Regan announced its development, which makes sense.

I would also add that in the hours after the call I tried to find any reference to "Space Warden" and could find nothing, which is strange.

Systems like "Brilliant Peebles" or "Thor's Hammer" had been hypothesized to exist for some time, but now we had something to go on and a witness that they exist and are up there now.

So that got me to thinking about another thing I had seen, mainly the infamous STS-48 video.

To give you a brief rundown an object enters the screen from the right and is hugging the outer atmosphere of the earth. There is a flash and the object quickly makes a 90 degree turn out into space. Moments later two objects launch past the screen ostensibly being fired at the object.

Now the interesting part if that a few seconds after that mission control comes on and asks the shuttle pilot Kenneth Reightler to execute "The Maneuver" followed quickly by an explanation of dumping waste water.

There are a couple of things here to think about. When the STS48 video came out there was some discussion at the time about those two objects being part of a space-based weapon shooting at a UFO. So that idea is old hat, and I think given the support of the idea that SDI was active in 1974 probably the case.

What is more interesting is the flash, which comes from behind the camera. Could that have been a laser firing at the object?

There has never really been a good explanation of why the object changed course. Maybe that Hunter/Killer our caller spoke of was firing.

The other interesting thing about STS48 and this confirmation of the SDI program being active was the request by ground control to execute "The Maneuver."

Back in the day, when STS48 originally occurred there was a lot of chitchat, even from the venerable Richard C. Hoagland, that STS48 was rolled over with the camera pointing to the right place as a sign that whistleblowers were trying to allow us to see a UFO in orbit. I think now given the command and the immediate change in attitude that was not the case.

I think they accidentally filmed SDI firing on something and went to a commercial break so to speak.

The other thing about this video that I think needs a reappraisal is what were they firing at? Was it alien, has been the collective theory or was it something else? I would argue given recent developments in research we might have been firing at some other group.

The easy money is firing on a Soviet or Russian vessel of some sort but given what we have learned over time it would appear that we are in this together, and maybe just maybe the Soviets were reacting to what we were reacting to. Some sort of outside force, human, but outside force nevertheless.

The Alternative Three Scenario

Alternative Three argues that we were carrying out joint operations, and given that if our equipment and their equipment were clashing, then it would start a proper war. Instead someone or some people go to extraordinary efforts to keep this quiet and silently carry out a war over our heads. That alone argues the idea for a second breakaway group which is not sanctioned.

So why does that make sense? Well publicly we seem to be in lock step. In the 1960s the US Air Force had come up with a daring program to bring warfare to the high reaches of space utilizing a space station called the "MOL" or Manned Observation Laboratory.

The "Laboratory" was to be equipped with a laser to directly ostensibly to compete with a Soviet program called "Almaz" which was launched in 1973 on Salyut 2, which is right around the time our mystery caller said his Hunter/ Killer went into orbit.

There were three ALMAZ stations publicly flew and the second successfully fired its cannon in a test. No one is really sure at what but it was apparently fired.

So we have three Almaz stations, a MOL and a Hunter/ Killer with two killer satellites in orbit. Sounds like a standoff right? Maybe but as I have pointed out before you don't spend that much money and keep these devices crewed for nothing, and this wasn't a MAD (Mutually Assured Destruction) scenario.

Those devices were there for a reason and at this point I don't think it was to engage each other or they would have done so. It also doesn't make sense to engage an enemy so powerful they could come here from another star and not think the enemy would escalate.

You would think they would bombard us with high technology if they were aliens being attacked, but instead it's a quiet war.

Based on that fact I suspect they were while both active, we know the Soviet one was, and they both took potshots at the competing space vehicles.

Strangely or rather not strangely I guess never hit anything, which would make the news. Why? Because then questions would have to be answered and people would be held accountable for whatever is going on up there.

That being said it is very interesting that those programs, the MOL and Almaz, seemed to work in lockstep. Different approaches but the same end goal and that is a little strange unless it was part of a larger planned defense or even offense.

Space War? That's NUTS! Maybe not…

There's another reason I think this, or rather two reasons really. The first being a rather strange incident which occurred in the late 1990s involving a UFO crash near Livermore, California. We had gotten a call into Ground Zero and Clyde had alerted me to check it out that an object had crashed nearby in Tracy, California.

The object was seen to streak across the sky and crash near a secret test facility outside Tracy. Following the crash a massive tire fire had started and the entire area was sealed off. For more information I would refer you to the UFO Hunters episode: UFO Surveillance.

Right after the crash we received a fax. It seems like that always happens! Well the fax had said a object had come in over the Pacific Ocean and two F-18s were scrambled from near by NAS Lemoore to shoot it down over the Pacific Ocean and that it had been damaged by a KKV—Kinetic Kill Vehicle.

Reports also stated that the object was on fire already when it got to Livermore and it was apparently hit by a laser. Someone really wanted that thing destroyed. But one thing is for certain, that event did trigger a “Moondust” or “BlueFly” operation and witnesses reported seeing large numbers of trucks coming out of there with tarps and stuff under the tarps.

It is also important to point out that once the incident happened and the are was sealed, recovery operations as well as firefighting were performed by a special team from Livermore’s top secret weapons lab.

KKV? Well it turned out that we do have a KKV program called Project Thor, and the system in orbit is called “Thor’s Hammer” a system, which uses tungsten rods as kinetic energy, weapons. Maybe the object had been hit in orbit by one of these “Rods from God” and was already damaged by the time the F-18s were sent to take it out.

The other reason why I’m starting to wonder if we did or do have a bit of a war in space going on is the work of Ed Grimsely. Grimsey has shot video and has reported over the last decade about seeing space battles replete with lasers taking place in orbit. Grimsley can reproduce this feat at will, but what is fighting up there?

It could be the Russians vs. NATO, but I kind of doubt that especially now. It doesn’t make sense to me, but it also doesn’t make sense that it’s alien.

One thing is certain: if these things are accurate then at a minimum its one breakaway civilization versus another. Be they Nazi or whatever.

The case is that they are fighting, and there is a lot of hardware up there to help the fight. There is also footage, and STS48 is only one example but there are others.

The interesting thing to me is that whoever is fighting they are keeping a low profile and that is the next part we need to figure out. Who is fighting up there? Maybe it's the Nazis from Base 211 darting across our skies in the latest Haunebu? That is as reasonable as any other idea.

One thing is for sure, it certainly makes things like Space Warden, SDI, and Solar Warden suddenly make sense in the larger scope. If there was an unsanctioned group up there and the Russians and Americans were working together then the synchronized timing would make a lot of sense to me.

There is a big plan, multinational plan to use Space Warden, Solar Warden, SDI and everything else we can think of to isolate and unitize the problem. That's good planning, and good execution.

13.

WEAPONS IN ORBIT—ARMING THE HIGH FRONTIER

Many years ago I was introduced to the amazing videos of Ed Grimsley, who at the time was discussing the idea that UFOs were engaging in some level of extra-atmospheric combat. At the time I dismissed the idea, thinking if a alien ship had come all this way that alien ship would posses enough destructive power to render our defensive apparatus null and void and simply blow anything we could throw at it out of the sky.

Now many years later, and especially given recent research into the Secret Space Program as well as the actual composition of battle platforms in space that maybe Grimsley was on to something. He was on to something but I suspect it was not aliens duking it out with earthmen but instead a space war between a breakaway civilization and its earthly brethren.

There are a couple of alternatives here. It could be the United States vs. the Russians in a battle royale but I suspect not, because a hot war in space should translate into a VERY hot war down here on earth. Instead I have come to believe that the battle is between a Nazi-derived breakaway civilization and the combined governments of NATO and the Russian Federation possibly even China as well.

So why do I believe this? I know it sounds fairly far fetched but to answer that we need to take a small course in “Star Wars” both from a US perspective as well as a Russian perspective. We also need to balance that against Gary McKinnon's findings and the Nazi UFO research that has been of the forefront in my mind the last few years.

SPACE WEAPONS:
Glittering C-Beams off the Taunhauser Gate

Since the 1950s both groups have embarked on a long range and costly journey to build weapons systems in space. On the surface these programs were put in place to destroy or prevent destruction. Billions of dollars have been spent on both sides to do some very interesting research, some of which will shock you.

Project Thor—Project Thor or Thor's Hammer is a space based defense system utilizing tungsten rods to create kinetic energy weapons. On the surface of it Thor was designed to hit Soviet installations and military forces using a very lethal but non-nuclear system. In reality as quick as Thor can be used to target the surface of the Earth it could also be rotated to fire these rods out into space at slow moving targets or with the proper trajectory it could be fired against larger bodies like the Moon or even Mars, theoretically.

Project SeeSaw—Project SeeSaw was initiated by the JASON group to build particle beam weapons. The project started in the late 1960s and later was publicly abandoned, though it did find some success. SeeSaw falling out of public view may have been to deflect its true purpose. Once implemented as part of the larger SDI program, SeeSaw would have give us not only aircraft mounted particle beams but also orbiting defense platforms.

Project Sipapu—This was originally an Army project to build land based particle beam weapons. This is the kind of weapons system that could be deployed to next generation fighting units on both a handheld basis or via modifying tanks to carry the weapon system. Its objective was to build space based weapons systems.

The "Chair Heritage" Program—Little is known about Chair Heritage outside of it being a Navy project to build particle beam weapons for ships.

Brilliant Pebbles—Brilliant pebbles was a stroke of genius. The essential theory behind Brilliant Pebbles was to build a delivery system which could fire a canister of high velocity pellets at a target. These pellets or pebbles traveling at a high rate of speed would effectively shred the target in a cloud of kinetic energy weapons. It is the same principle as Thor but on a smaller scale.

Space Warden—The information about this Solar Warden comes to us from a whistle blower who called into an interview I was a part of on the Ground Zero radio show. He stated that in the 1970s he had worked, as an engineer, on a highly secret (protected by Federal Marshals) program to build a constellation of three satellites. The first two satellites would be parked in an equatorial orbit and use a particle beam to hit targets (possibly the logical outcome of SeeSaw) while the third satellite was an autonomous hunter killer satellite that would patrol the skies. The whistleblower went on to say that the system was deployed with the rest of the SDI system successfully in the 1980s.

Solar Warden—This is the infamous program stumbled upon by hacker Gary McKinnon which described off world ships, troops and crews which functioned as a space fleet. He located manifests, logs and registers of the ships including some rather odd ship names. McKinnon's findings are controversial but I believe they past the sniff test for many reasons, but one of which is the lengths the United States government went to in order to attempt to try him. They wanted him gone, and they worked hard at it. The other reason I believe there may be some validity to the claims is around what he found. Much of what he found appears to be logistical in nature and while secret probably carried a lower secrecy rating then say specifications of the ships. It should all be highly classified but one would suspect that logistical data would be a little lower and probably was the cause of the breech.

MANNED BATTLE PLATFORMS: Have Space Canon, uh I Mean Particle Canon, Will Travel

Ok so at this point we can see starting in the late 1950s there was an aggressive line of research coming out of the military to build space based weapons. At the same time the military, both Soviet and American, embarked on a manned battle platform strategy.

We'll never know how successful the programs were, but conventionally we are told the plans were never completed or the carcass of the battle station was un-orbited and burned. I can understand the logic of believing the conventional but I think in this case and given what we've seen over time I think there is a case which can be made that at some level these stations were built and are up there, or maybe they have been superseded by automated defense systems. We do need to remember that DARPA is almost 50 years ahead of us here in the conventional world.

So what did they come up with?

The Manned Observation Laboratory (The MOL)— United States Air Force project to build and later deploy a manned battle station equipped with a laser. The two man crew, both Air Force astronauts, and yes the USAF does have its own astronaut corps, were designated to spend three to six months onboard. Armed with a laser canon, or possibly a particle cannon, their mission ostensibly was to be ready to attack then Soviet space based platforms or space planes (maybe even UFOs?).

The Almaz—The Almaz was the Soviet equivalent to the MOL. It was indeed launched and crewed for sometime and was armed with a 23mm cannon. The cannon was actually a massive engineering feat since the designers actually had to place rockets on the sides of the Almaz to counter act the force of the firing. Cosmonauts who served on the Almaz report that it was quite an adventure to fire the canon and we know that it was indeed fired several times.

Personal conversations I've had with several people who worked on the Soviet space program indicate that there were possibly up to three Almaz stations in orbit and they were fully equipped to attack if ordered. Were there MOLs in orbit? Yes there was at least one, and the crew was carried up to it via a Gemini-B launch vehicle.

But what about SkyLab?

There are rumors that Skylab was armed as well but I have seen no concrete evidence of it, but that being said it stands to reason that it could have been. It would make since especially considering the compositions of the crew, all military, and the proximity of the Skylab program and the ending of the MOL program.

Now the 2 billion dollar question: What is up there now?

We've heard over time from various researchers, including Bill

Birnes who is definitely in the know, that there are stations in geosynchronous orbit over key sites.

Birnes has maintained for some time there is a station locked over Nellis AFB. Which would make sense since there is a significant amount of research going on at Area 51 to this end and if the stations or to defend against an outside threat (i.e. Nazis) then it would make sense to park them in a stationary orbit over major defense facilities or population centers. Given the technology today it also would not be beyond the pale to expect crew changes, a la Solar Warden, were being done via a next generation spacecraft.

The MOL and Almaz were very real projects with paper trails so we do indeed know both of these battle stations were placed in orbit. I think it is logical to assume others could have been built in orbit or on the Moon and ferried over. The will was there as was the funding.

Figure 52 ARTIST RENDEIRNG OF BRILLIANT PEBBLES

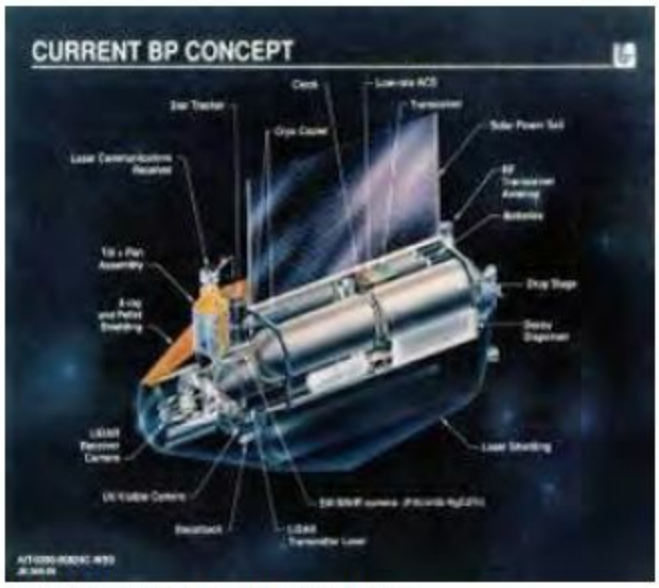

Figure 53 BRILLIANT PEBBLES CUTAWAY

Figure 54 ARTIST RENDERING OF SPACE BASED LASER

Figure 55 ARTIST RENDERING OF PROJECT THOR

Figure 56 ARTIST RENDERING OF THE ALMAZ

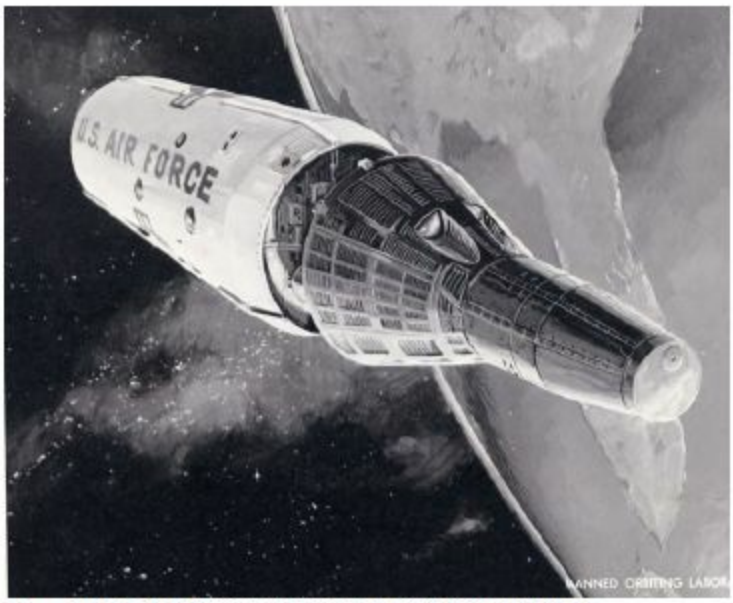

Figure 57 THE MANNED OBSERVATION LABORATORY (MOL)

14.

MOON BASES, MARS BASES AND THE GREAT BEYOND

The 1960s was a turbulent time, unpopular wars, social unrest and apparently a vigorous space weapons program so it should not surprise us that even while the MOL was being operated both the Army and Air Force had also come up with plans to occupy the Moon. The Soviets had a program as well.

Project Horizon

A US Army project to build a Moon base by 1967. The base would have offensive and defense capabilities as was to be staffed by a crew of over 200 specially trained Army soldier/astronauts by 1965. Again as we have seen this project was publicly killed off but that doesn't mean it didn't enter the special access projects realm where there is lots of money and no oversight.

Officially Project Horizon was a study to determine the feasibility of constructing a military base on the Moon.

On June 8, 1959, an internal team at the Army Ballistic Missile Agency (ABMA) tasked with researching Horizon, produced a report entitled "Project Horizon, A U.S. Army Study for the Establishment of a Lunar Military Outpost."

The permanent outpost was predicted to cost approximately $6 billion, an astronomical sum for 1959, and slated become operational by December 1966 with minimum operating team of 12 soldiers.

The United State's favorite Nazi rocket scientist Wernher von Braun, who was head of ABMA by the way, appointed Heinz-Hermann Koelle (a Luftwaffe pilot during the war) to head the project team at the Redstone Arsenal.

Early plans called for over 140 separate Saturn A rocket launches to lift components for assembly in low Earth orbit at the site of a spent fuel tank which could be converted to a space station. From there a separate landing vehicle was to be used to land the 16 astronauts assigned to assemble the base to shepherd the components from LEO to the Moon.

Construction was slated to last from 1964 to April, 1966 when the base would be initially by a team of 12 men and defended by specially modified anti-personal minds as well as Davy Crockett rockets specially fitted with low yield Nuclear Warheads.

Once complete the basic building layout on the base would be based on the use of cylindrical metal tanks, 3.05 m in diameter and 6.10 m in length. Power was derived from two nuclear reactors, which would be located in deep pits to provide shielding and provide power for the operation of the early phase installation, and for the construction equipment used to build the permanent facility. Empty cargo and propellant containers could then be assembled and used for storage of bulk supplies, weapons, and essentials.

Communications would be handled via a parabolic antenna erected near the main quarters that would provide constant communications with Earth.

Due to the vehicle energy requirements to move to and from the base, Horizon had only limited locations to position the base.

Because the installation had to be at 20 deg latitude/longitude on the Moon, from ~20° N, ~20° W to ~20° S, ~20° E. Within this designated area, the Horizon planners selected three sites:

- Sinus Aestuum, near the Eratosthenes crater
- Sinus Aestuum near Sinus Medii
- Mare Imbrium, north of Montes Apenninus

Project Lunex

Project Lunex was the Air Force equivalent to Project Horizon and called for a crew of 21 to live on this underground defense station at a cost of a mere $7.5 billion. The interesting part of this project is that it pre-dated the Apollo program and if operational may explain why the Moon Hoax theories swirl around even to this day.

The original 1958 plan for a manned lunar landing well prior to the Apollo Program, with the later final lunar plan in 1961 calling for a crew of 21 airman located in underground Air Force base on the Moon. The plan was to be complete by 1968 at a total cost of $7.5 billion. Interestingly the USAF plan was a total departure from the Apollo design and called for the Lunex vehicle to land with all astronauts on the surface versus the final Apollo design involving a separate ascent module thus leaving the command and service modules in lunar orbit with a single astronaut.

Interestingly the original Apollo plan was for direct ascent, similar to Lunex. The Lunex base was supposed to be online by the end of 1968 located in the Kepler crater.

Project Zvezda

Zvezda was a Soviet project similar to Horizon and included, at least at some level, conversations between the Soviet space program and our own to jointly operate and man the base. I think its safe to assume, given the direction of weapons development, that this base too was almost certainly armed.

The Zvesda moonbase project was originally ordered by the Soviet's Chief Space Engineer Korolyov and assigned to Barmin' s Spetcmash bureau. The project was officially named "DLB Lunar Base" in technical specifications and Zvezda in government documents. Unofficially, the project was referred to as Barmingrad (Barmin's city) by its design team.

Under the plan, slated to begin in 1970, then later pushed 1980, Zvezda's main habitation module would be the first component sent to the Moon. As building progressed, automatic spacecraft such as a Lunokhod rover, would be sent to the installation. Eventually followed by a large human crew as well as the final modules. For safety and security the habitation modules were to have been covered with regolith.

There was also discussion by the Zvezda designers that to aid in repositioning the base, all the habitation modules would been installed on wheel chassis, to create a movable train. Nuclear Reactor and Atomic Batteries supplied base energy.

THE MOON HOAX:
Was there a Hoax and if so why?

When we look at the Moon theory one thing has always jumped out at me. I don't believe we fully faked the Moon landing. I know that will draw the ire of some but I think there is plenty of evidence we landed including the ability to use a telescope and see the junk left behind by the Apollo missions. Its true you can use a telescope and see the junk we left behind. Obviously these projects did not include the basic law of camping which is to leave it better then you found it.

So why the falsification?

I think, given what we know about Horizon and Lunex it is not beyond the realm to believe that Armstrong and Aldrin may have indeed seen something they were not supposed to, so steps were taken to cover-up what they saw.

Think of how defeating it would have been to Armstrong to jump off the LEM and pronounce “This is one small step man and one giant leap for mankind, oh what why are those guys standing on the ridge staring at us?” This is the plausible scenario.

Apollo 11 was off course and missed its landing zone, so Armstrong had to manually land the LEM so they landed in an unprepared location. By landing in an unprepared location they, the astronauts, may have been exposed to technology or people they were unprepared for. What followed was a tour de force of covering up.

Fake photos, brainwashing, maybe even the involvement of Stanley Kubrick its all there for the asking. In fact as evidence of the level of cover-up perpetrated on the Apollo 11 program there is an interesting story Buzz Aldrin relayed while being interviewed on C-SPAN which I think does lend a level of credence to this line of research.

During the interview Aldrin was asked what it was like on the Moon, and he responded by talking about seeing the tiny blue dot of the earth and speaking about “Magnificent Desolation,” but he also said when he originally came back to Earth he was at a dinner party and someone had asked him the same question.

Aldrin said he didn’t know how to answer and started to panic, effectively having a panic attack, and headed off to the bathroom where he threw up. This is a classic mind control block, and is placed over a memory to stop that memory from surfacing. Instead the victim feels physically ill to deflect the topic.

Something was obviously up because shortly after the fanfare had died away Armstrong went into seclusion and only rarely granted interview. Why would a national hero hide? Because he is just a shy guy who doesn't like the attention? Possibly but more then likely he knew that he had participated in something amazing, amazingly dangerous because he had seen things.

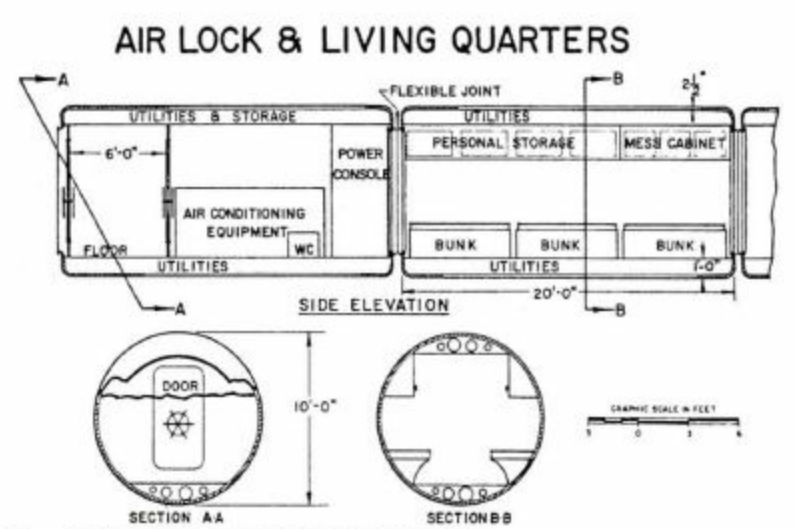

Figure 58 PROJECT HORIZON LIVING QUARTERS

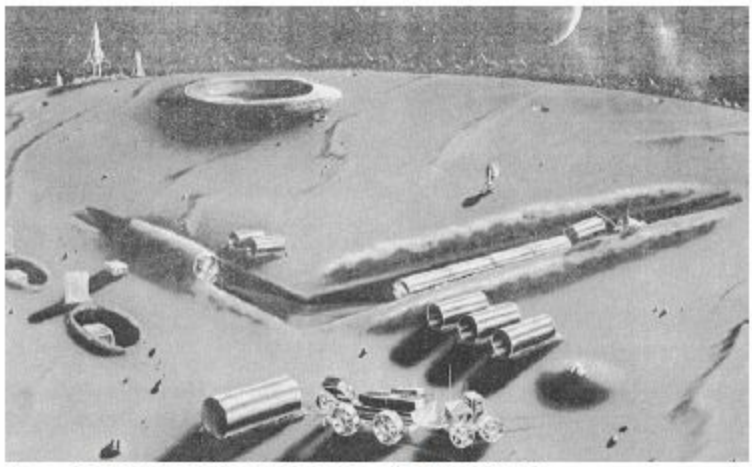

Figure 59 ARTIST RENDERING OF PROJECT HORIZON

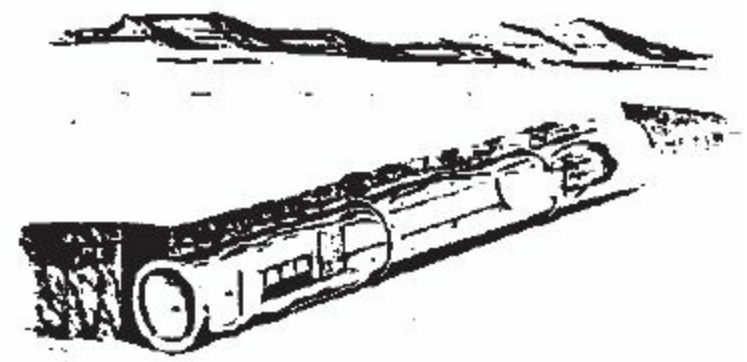

Figure 60 PROJECT HORIZON UNDERGROUND BUILDING

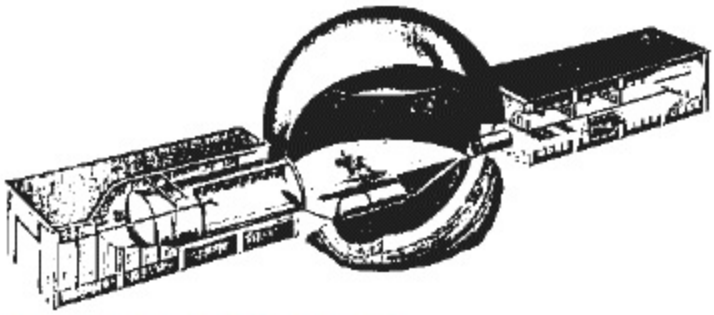

Figure 61 PROJECT HORIZON BUILDING

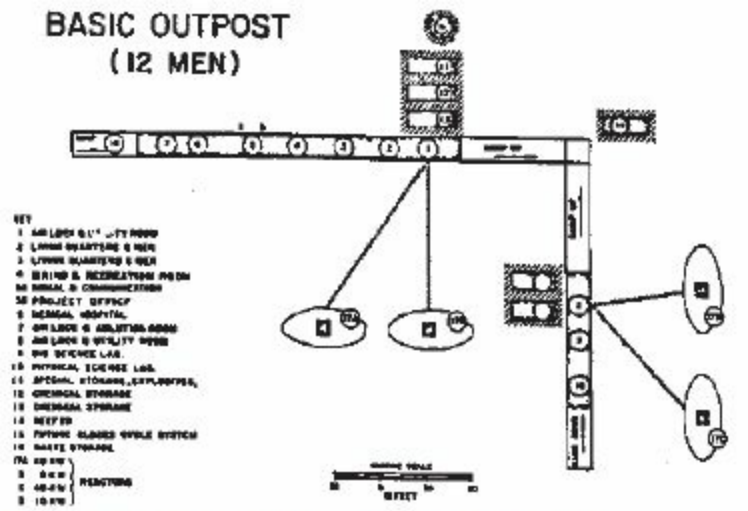

Figure 62 PROJECT HORIZON CONSTRUCTION CAMP DESIGN

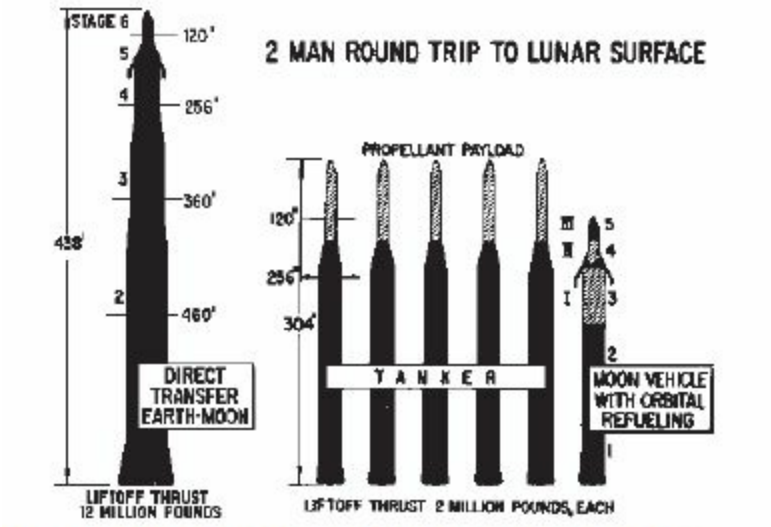

Figure 63 PROJECT HORIZON LERV (LUNAR-EARTH RETURN VEHICLE)

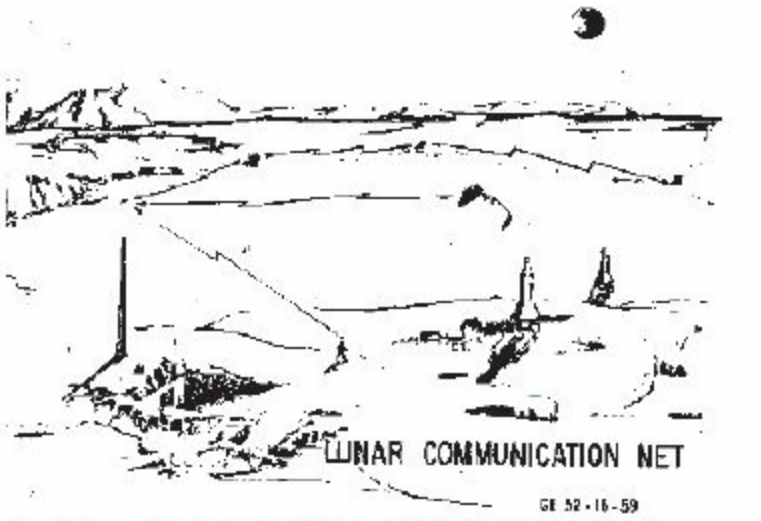

Figure 64 PROJECT HORIZON LUNAR COMMUNICATION NETWORK

Figure 65 PROJECT HORIZON SPACE SUIT

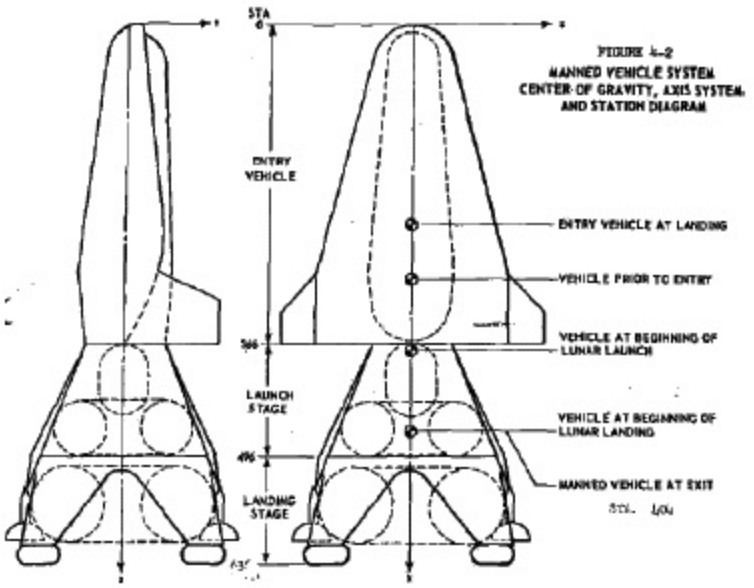

Figure 66 PROJECT LUNEX LANDER

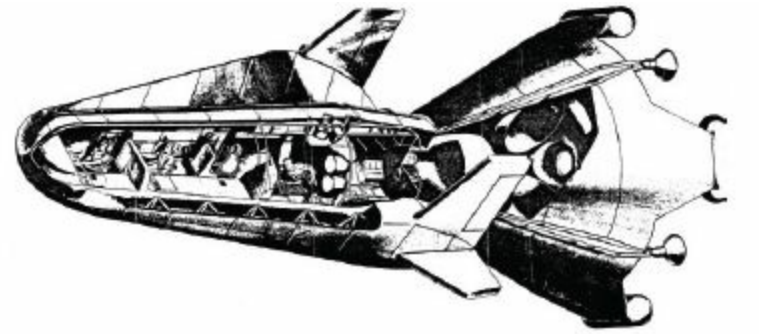

Figure 67 CUTAWAY OF LUNEX LANDER

~~SECRET~~

92

~~CONFIDENTIAL~~

LUNAR EXPEDITION PLAN

LUNEX

Classification changed to C
By authority of DoD Directive 5200.10
Date 5/25/67

Classification Changed To Confidential
By Authority Of Group 3
Downgraded at 12 year intervals
Date 8/5/79 - Stalcup

MAY 1961

HEADQUARTERS
SPACE SYSTEMS DIVISION

Figure 68 PROJECT LUNEX REPORT

Figure 69 PROJECT LUNEX LAUNCH PAD

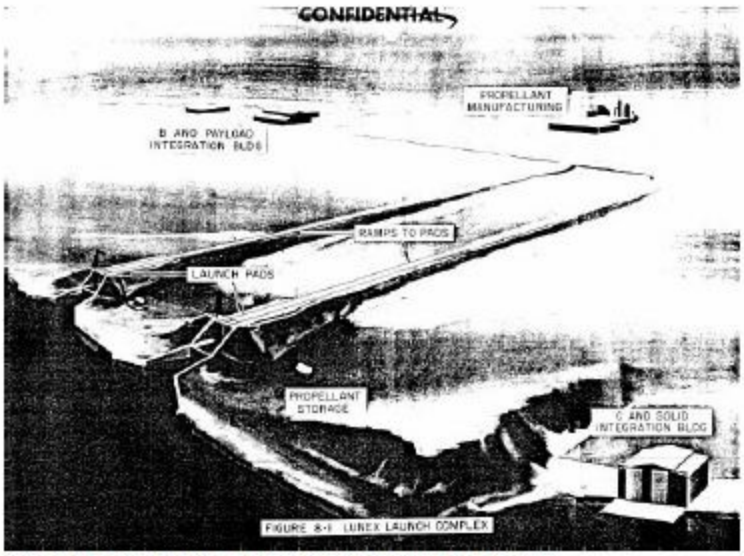

Figure 70 LARGER VIEW OF LUNEX LAUNCH COMPLEX

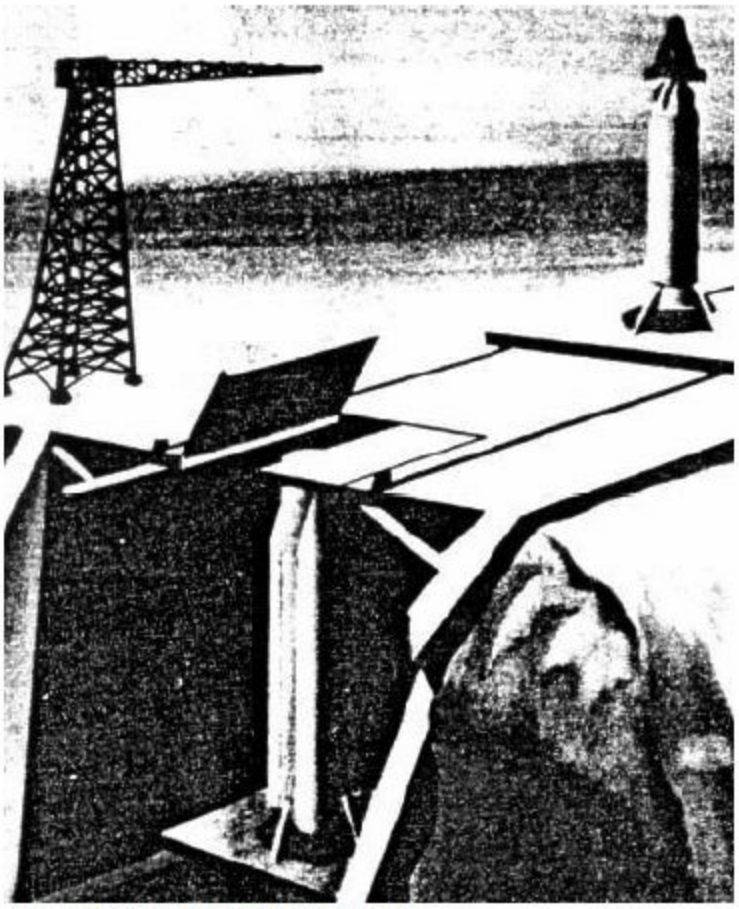

Figure 71 PROJECT LUNEX LAUNCH SITE

15.

STAFFING THE SOLAR WAR MACHINE—MYSTERIOUS DISAPPEARANCES, NATIONAL PARKS, AND THE BREAKAWAY CIVILIZATION

One of the things that has always been perplexing about the Breakaway Civilization was the notion of "Batch Consignments." Batch Consignments was a term used in Alternative Three to describe the movement of individuals off-world for use as slave labor to construct bases on the Moon and Mars. The idea of Batch Consignments was to use effectively slave labor as a commodity work force for construction of the bases needed by the Breakaways for expansion.

On the surface the idea seems quiet reprehensible, people being forcibly relocated and forced to perform slave labor. Then again you are dealing with a group that does not necessarily hold human life in high regard, but it does make sense. It is cheaper to use slave labor then to use a skilled group of people to perform any task.

So here's the problem—How do you prove that Batch Consignments exist? A relatively large workforce would be needed, the work would be grueling and the mortality rate would probably be high due to accidents, overwork and other causes. So you would need a constant supply of new people being kidnapped to provide the labor force. So where do you get large numbers of people over a long term? The answer, at least in part, may surprise you.

Ever year thousands of people go missing under mysterious circumstances. Accidents, murder, and many other reasons can provide the context. Recently there have been many stories about people kidnapped who spent decades in captivity before escaping to tell their story, but there are others which actually defy conventional logic.

Figure 72 Africa's Wars and Conflicts 1980-1996

Most batch consignments, if they exist, can be attributed to political instability in the third world. During many of the regional wars seen in Eastern Europe, Africa, and South East Asia instability and large numbers of displaced individuals provide a large source of labor. During these conflicts entire villages could disappear without a trace with little or no attention and the level of humanitarian catastrophe in the worn torn regions makes it almost impossible to catalog the number of people displaced, lost or just vanished.

During the Rwanda Genocide in 1994 more then 800,000 people were murdered and hundreds of thousands simply vanished and are presumed dead. This would represent men, women and children and some of those individuals could have become batch consignments very easily.

There is another mystery that was discovered by researcher, and ex police officer, David Paulides. Paulides has undertaken research into disappearance clusters and his research has proved some very interesting results. On one hand he has documented numerous cases where, in National Parks, children have disappeared within feet of their parents only to be found miles away sometimes even over mountain ranges with no recollection of how they got to that location.

In other cases he has documented cases where people simply vanished leaving their clothes in a pile as if they were snatched from within their clothes. Their clothes simply piled where the person had been standing. In both cases dogs were unable to pick up the scent, which is strange, it was as if the person just dematerialized.

What's more interesting is the locations of the clusters of disappearances. If we look at the map which Paulides has made, we can see that at least some of clusters are located near places like Tonopah/Area 51/Nellis, Edwards AFB, Sandia, as well as many other major installations which could be used for movement. In fact many of the disappearances are reasonably close to facilities documented on a map made by "TAL" dating back to 1990 where he documented secret underground bases and a secret underground rail network which links them. The match is pretty uncanny.

Figure 73 TAL Map Copyright TAL

Figure 74 Disappearance Map Copyright David Paulides / CANAM Missing Project

More over Paulides has documented numerous cases of disappearances inside National Parks, and when people inquire with the NPS about the disappearances? They are stone walled and told the National Parks Service does not keep records of disappearances. This lead Paulides and others to file Freedom of Information Act requests which have as of yet provided no further information.

In fact on occasion researchers have even been intimidated by National Parks Service personnel when filling FOIA requests. So why the secrecy? One would think the NPS would be doing whatever they could to locate the missing campers or hikers. One would also imagine that, given the numbers of visitors, the NPS would be working hard to protect people, which I think they do to some major extent. However you still cannot escape the fact that many of these clusters are in National Parks. But that also makes sense.

If you want to harvest labor you are going to go where people are, and there are a lot of them in National Parks. They also provide a good cover—Well Bob went hiking and got lost case closed. But the patterns Paulides is finding is disturbing. As Paulides put it in an interview with George Knapp:

"People disappear in the wilderness all the time. We're talking about something different. These are unusual things that don't make sense, that happen to cluster together in three to four, sometimes as many as 20 to 30 people missing at one location."

The numbers here, at least the numbers we know, are fairly small. Paulides has found about 400 cases so far of strange disappearances but that is what he has found. The actual number could be far higher, and is high enough that he has written four books on the subject. So I think he's touching the tip of the iceberg.

He has also documented large number of disappearances of young people in Canada where young men and women have disappeared from native villages, and again there is no official comment.

Could these disappearances be linked? I think its possible especially when comparing his map to that of TAL's map. It is very odd to me that even given the small geography TAL represented that there are clusters of missing persons around his facilities. That is just strange to me, but it also makes sense. You need to be able to take people somewhere for transport.

16.

DEAD SCIENTISTS AND THE DISAPPEARANCES OF THE GREAT

Batch consignments are not the only disappearances related to the implementation of Alternative Three. In order to staff such a complex or series of external space based complexes you need the menial help, or the batch consignments discussed in the earlier chapter, but you also need scientists, technicians, soldiers, pilots and many other more sought after skill sets. It's in relation to these individuals that we must now search out evidence of the "brain drain."

In all of Ufology and Conspiracy Research there are two men who have produced the most exhaustive catalogs of disappearances. David Paulides of course and his CANAM disappearance database which has produced a wealth of information related to the batch consignments element, but its Steve Qualye and his list of missing scientists which it would appear has documented the brain drain most effectively. What's interesting about Quayle's work is that he has come across not only disappearances but also more importantly the high number of murders which have occurred in the scientific community.

On one hand you could argue that the in any societal group there will be a certain percentage of murders or random deaths but his research has shown no less then 73 deaths of high ranking scientists just between the years of 2004 to 2014, so an average of 7 deaths of important scientists per year, scientists who are top of their fields and that is what was recorded.

According to the Alternative Three scenario many of these deaths could be either prearranged disappearances or death to function as a cover to move offworld or in some cases the deaths might be caused by being read into the Secret Space Program then opting out. In this case the death would be to prevent data leakage. This was shown in the mysterious auto accident which claimed the life of "Dr. Valentine" in the film. Obviously Valentine was a fictitious character but the model is there.

Take for example the case of Anina Hundsdoerfer, a Canadian government scientist. Hundsdoerfer was known to have gone into work on her day off, but then mysteriously vanished. In the process she left behind her phone as well as her ID. Incidentally, her 2005 blue Toyota Echo is also gone. According to her roommate the disappearance is completely out of character, or was it?[1]

This case very much matches the representation of "Dr. Anne Clarke" who in the film begins by speaking about her poor working conditions and is later cornered and very cagey about her future plans. She ends up disappearing utterly, leaving behind only her car parked at Heathrow airport. Again "Dr. Anne Clarke" is a character but the situation very much matches Anina Hundsdoerfer who came into work, on her day off, then disappeared leaving behind her phone and ID. Although she was later found, the circumstances of her death appear peculiar. Her car was found on the road, locked and her body some ways away. Was she read into the program then got cold feet then murdered to cover-up the program?

Another well known disappearance was that of computer scientist Jim Gray, who in 2007 set out for a short sailing trip off the coast of San Francisco but then vanished. His ship was equipped with an Emergency Position-Indicator Radio Beacon which should have activated but failed to activate. An exhaustive search by the Coast Guard failed to turn up any debris or evidence of the whereabouts of his boat. Gray, who was an expert in databases and contributed not only to the development of Virtual Earth but also the TerraServer, would have been a key candidate for moving offworld. His skills around databases would be invaluable to an organization collecting vast amounts of data such as a Secret Space Program would.

Perhaps the most interesting of all missing and dead scientists conspiracy theories are those revolving around the 25 scientists and technicians of GEC-Marconi who died in a span of six years. This also includes a related 26th death of journalist Jonathan Moyle who was found hanged in his room in 1990.

What's particularly interesting about the GEC-Marconi deaths is not only that the timing of the deaths, most died within a short time of completing a project or leaving the company, but also the fact that GEC-Marconi was working on the SDI system as well as other highly compartmentalized defense projects and GEC-Marconi was a major defense contractor to the Ministry of defense in the United Kingdom.

Below is a list of the individuals who died just in regards to GEC-Marconi:

March 1982: Professor Keith Bowden, 46

A Computer programmer and scientist at Essex University working for Marconi on ultra high speed computing and computer-controlled aircraft.

Death: Fatal car crash lost control of his car and flew across a multilane freeway before plunging onto a railway line.

April 1983: Lt. Colonel Anthony Godley, 49

In charge of the Work Study Unit at the Royal College of Military Science.

Death: Disappeared in April 1983.

March 1985: Roger Hill, 49

Hill was a radar designer and draughtsman with Marconi.

Death: Self inflicted (?) shotgun wound while at home.

November 19, 1985: Jonathan Walsh, 29

Walsh was a digital communications expert who had worked at GEC- Marconi as well as at British Telecom's research center in Martlesham Heath, Suffolk.

Death: Died after falling from his hotel room in Abidjan, West Africa. Prior to his death Walsh had confided in friends that his life was in danger.

August 5, 1986: Vimal Dajibhai, 24

Dajibhai was a software engineer with GEC-Marconi, and was responsible for testing computer control systems of Tigerfish and Stingray torpedoes. He also worked on SDI related simulation systems.

Death: Dajibhai had told his wife he would be working late, but drove more then a hundred miles to the city of Bristol where he fell 260 feet from the Clifton Suspension Bridge over the River Avon. Interestingly police reported a needle-sized puncture wound on the left buttock, but this was later dismissed as being a result of the fall.

October 1986: Arshad Sharif, 26

Sharif was working on a system for detecting of submarines by satellite.

Death: Bizarrely Sharif died by placing a rope around his neck, tying the other end to a tree and then driving off in his car with the accelerator pedal jammed down.

January 1987: Richard Pugh, 37

Pugh was a Ministry of Defence computer consultant and digital communications expert.

Death: Pugh was found dead in his apartment with his feet bound and a plastic bag over his head. There was also a rope was tied to his body which coiling four times around his neck.

January 8, 1987: Avtar Singh-Gida, 26

Singh-Gida was a researcher at the Ministry of Defense Admiralty Research Establishment and conducting tests of submarine warfare equipment.

Disappearance: Disappeared mysteriously in January 1987

January 12, 1987: Dr. John Brittan, 52

Brittan was engaged in top secret work at the Royal College of Military Science at Shrivenham, Oxfordshire, and at a research department at the Ministry of Defence.

Death: Death by carbon monoxide poisoning in his own garage, which occurred shortly after returning from a work trip to the US.

February 1987: David Skeels, 43

Engineer at Marconi Space and Defence Systems

Death: Skeels was found dead in his car with a hose connected to the exhaust pipe.

February 1987: Victor Moore, 46

Design Engineer with Marconi Space and Defence Systems.

Death: Moore died from a drug overdose. Moore is believed to have just finished working on an infrared satellite project when he died.

February 22, 1987: Peter Peapell, 46

Peapell had been working on testing titanium for it's resistance to explosives and the use of computer analysis of signals from metals.

Death: Peapell was found dead allegedly from carbon monoxide poisoning, in his garage. What's interesting is that his wife had found him on his back with his head parallel to the rear car bumper and his mouth in line with the exhaust pipe, with the car engine running. At the time Police were baffled as to how Peapell could have maneuvered into position.

March 30, 1987: David Sands, 37

David Sands was a senior scientist working for Easams, the sister company to Marconi.

Death: Sands died in a fatal car crash when he made an abrupt U-turn at high speed into an old restaurant.

April 10, 1987: Stuart Gooding, 23

Gooding was a postgraduate researcher at the Royal College of Military Science.

Death: Gooding was killed instantly when his car collided head on with a truck. The truck driver was said to be unhurt.

April 10, 1987: David (Robert) Greenhalgh, 46

Greenhalgh was the contracts manager at ICL's defence divison.

Death: Greenhalgh sustained multiple injuries when he leapt from a 40 foot high railway bridge on his way to work. Greenhalgh survived the fall and after regaining consciousness he said he had no idea how or why he jumped off the bridge. He mysteriously died a few days later while still in the hospital.

There are several more Marconi employees which also met bizarre deaths but given the rapid timing of the deaths they would appear to be connected to the completion of some larger project especially given that personnel connected with Marconi were, at one point, dying almost once per month.

Figure 75 Dr. Anina Hundsdoerfer (Copyright CBC / EPS)

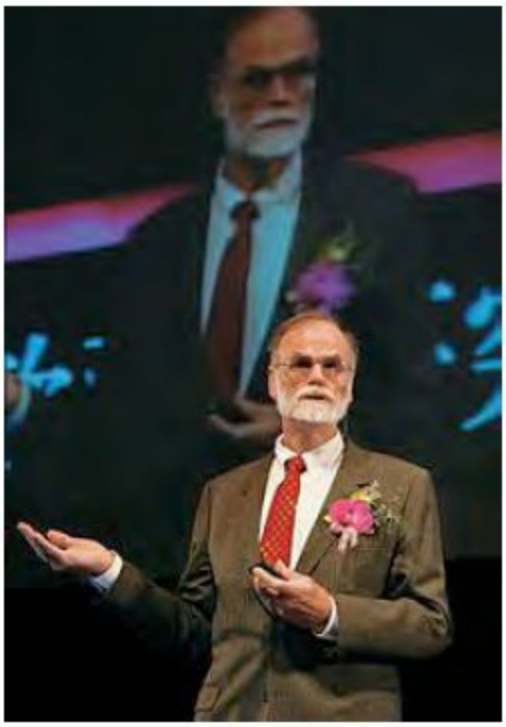

Figure 76 Jim Gray 2006

[1]http://www.cbc.ca/news/canada/edmonton/disappearance-of-alber-ta-government-scientist-troubles-police-1.2585784

17.

THE END IS NIGH

Since the original airing of Alternative Three in 1977 the show has been ingested, dissected, and tossed away. Facts have come and gone, research came into play only to disappear. All the while the mystery of Alternative Three persisted.

As an archetype Alternative Three is nothing less then the blueprint for the end of the world. It seemingly documents, and uncovers, a vast multi-national conspiracy to survive an event so calamitous that it threatens the very human race. It is an extinction threat which has been planned for. That is the attraction to the topic, at least for me. Someone spent a great deal of time putting that film together. The telltale signs of the actual event stitched into the science fiction: that is Alternative Three.

Ambrose, Miles, and Brinton have all maintained it was a work of fiction. They maintained that the film represented their best efforts at a "War of the Worlds" style program. In that they succeeded. The film still unnerves people more then 40 years after its broadcasts. It was only Leslie Watkins, the writer of the novelization, who came forward in the 1980s to attest to its truthfulness.

What's interesting is that while Alternative Three is obviously a work of fiction, it ties so directly to actual events. The discovery of an impending "Green House" effect by Roger Revelle of the Scripps Institute of Oceanography, Project Argus, bunker construction and then the revelations of Gary McKinnon all tying together into a vast narrative with each piece supporting the larger mythos of Alternative Three.

As a work of fiction it is masterful, having laid out a well thought through plan to escape the end of the world. As a blueprint it represents the missing glue of so many elements of the larger conspiracy archetype. Alternative Three is that missing jigsaw piece which actually allows us to see the end game.

In conspiracy research, many times you cannot see the bigger picture. You become lost in the minutia of the moment. Tracking down the strands of something larger, all the while unaware of the actual game plan. In short you almost always cannot find the end game or completion of the program. Its like watching a TV program but missing the climatic last 10 minutes of the show. In this case we not only get the last 10 minutes but are given a very rare glimpse into the making of the show as well if we follow that analogy.

Is the end nigh? It's impossible to tell what time scale is being worked against. We see the programs, and the location conclusion but we cannot see the project due dates. This places us in an interesting moment in time.

We know something is coming and we can see the preparations for the eventual arrival of the coming event. We can see the cover-ups and the experiments, but still the end date eludes us. It would appear however that, given the rate of these projects, we are coming to that inflection point. Peak Oil, Climate Change, and civil unrest surround us all pushing us towards that end date. So it would appear that we are now on the downward slope and apparently the end is nigh.

Based on that I would imagine that in the coming months or years we will see more revelations. If Alternative Three is to be believed, which I would argue it should be, we will continue to see revelations around climate change as well as parallel governments, space programs, and other oddities which will shock us and unnerve us because whatever the event is, it is coming.

I end my book with Leslie Watkins' letter to a "Ms. Dittrich" taken from the Windwords Newsletter and posted to the Vangard Sciences Archive October 28, 1989:

Dear Ms. Dittrich:

Thank you for your letter, which reached me today. Naturally, I am delighted by your interest in Alternative 3 and by the fact that you plan to sell it in the Windwords bookstore. I will certainly cooperate in any way I can.

The correct description of Alternative 3 was given to you by the representative from Penguin Books. The book is based on fact, but uses that fact as a launchpad for a HIGH DIVE INTO FICTION. In answer to your specific questions:

1) There is no astronaut named Grodin.

2) There is no Sceptre Television and the reported Benson is also fictional.

3) There is no Dr. Gerstein.

4) Yes, a "documentary" was televised in June 1977 on Anglia Television, which went out to the entire national network in Britain. It was called Alternative 3 and was written by David Ambrose and produced by Christopher Miles (whose names were on the book for contractual reasons). This original TV version, which I EXPANDED IMMENSELY for the book, was ACTUALLY A HOAX which had been scheduled for transmission on April Fools' Day. Because of certain problems in finding the right network slot, the transmission was delayed.

The TV program did cause a tremendous uproar because viewers refused to believe it was fiction. I initially took the view that the basic premise was so way-out, particularly the way I aimed to present it in the book, that no one would regard it as non-fiction. Immediately after publication, I realized I was totally wrong. In fact, the amazing mountains of letters from virtually all parts of the world-including vast numbers from highly intelligent people in positions of responsibility-convinced me that I had ACCIDENTALLY trespassed into a range of top-secret truths.

Documentary evidence provided by many of these correspondents decided me to write a serious and COMPLETELY NON-FICTION sequel. Unfortunately, a chest containing the bulk of the letters was among the items which were mysteriously LOST IN TRANSIT some four years ago when I moved from London, England, to Sydney, Australia, before I moved on to settle in New Zealand. For some time after Alternative 3 was originally published, I have reason to suppose that my home telephone was being tapped and my contacts who were experienced in such matters were convinced that certain intelligence agencies considered that I probably knew too much.

So, summing up, the book is FICTION BASED ON FACT. But I now feel that I inadvertently got VERY CLOSE TO A SECRET TRUTH. I hope this is of some help to you and I look forward to hearing from you again.

With best wishes,
Leslie Watkins

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Olav Phillips is Conspiracy Researcher, specializing in the Secret Space Program, Exotic Aircraft, High Technology, Foreign Policy, Pre-History and Mysterious Civilizations. He is a regular contributor to Paranoia Magazine and ConspiracyHQ. He has also written for Mysteries Magazine and served as Executive Producer and Principle Researcher for Ground Zero Radio with Clyde Lewis (Nationally Syndicated by Premiere Radio Networks).

Olav has also appeared on many popular radio shows as well as television presentations including: The Outer Edge, The Higher Side Chats, ConspiracyHQ TV, Shadows In the Dark Radio, Coast to Coast AM, Voyager (RAI Due), as well as being a long time contributor to Ground Zero Radio's investigations including the famous Tracy, CA UFO Crash case featured on UFO Hunters. Olav has also contributed to many of the television presentations you've seen on Area 51, UFOs and conspiracies.

Olav lives in Northern California with his wife and two sons.

A screen shot from the documentary Alternative 003.

A screen shot from the documentary Alternative 003.

A screen shot of Mars from the documentary Alternative 003.

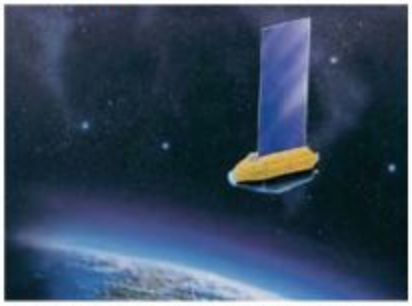
Four screen shots of Mars from the documentary Alternative 003.

Above and Left: William Lyne's photos of the German Flying Saucer Compass in his possession.

An artist's concept of a Horton HO 229 in flight.

Above: Alleged photo of a Hannebu II in flight. Right: Alleged photo of a Hannebu on the ground.

An artist's rendering of a space based laser system.



An artist's rendering of Brilliant Pebbles.

An artist's rendering of Project THOR.